Catfish Farmers of America Lodges Opposition To Proposed FDA Rule Relaxing Import Standards

Permission to reprint by
The Catfish Journal

Catfish Farmers of America is urging the Food and Drug Administration not to relax standards covering the amount of unapproved drugs in imported fish.

In a formal statement to the federal agency, CFA said the industry “strongly opposes this proposed rule and is deeply concerned that the rule, if implemented, could have adverse impacts on the safety of the U.S. food supply.”

Butch Wilson, CFA President, said it made no sense for drugs not approved for use in the United States to be allowed in imported fish.

The chart above shows the number of drugs approved for aquaculture by selected countries and the EU that have a maximum residue limit.

“This proposed rule would create a loophole where potentially dangerous and banned drugs, (could) reach American dinner tables.”

Wilson said, “If a drug hasn’t been approved for use here in the United States, it should not be allowed in imports. We strongly urge the Administration to reconsider this ill-advised rule. U.S. Consumers deserve to know that their fish is safe.”

The FDA proposal, announced in January, would significantly change regulations regarding tolerances of unapproved drugs found in imported products. It would allow unapproved drugs contained in imported fish to enter the U.S. market while those same drugs, due to their health dangers, would remain banned here in the U.S.

In addition, Wilson noted, the FDA “greatly underestimates” the number of small businesses that would be adversely impacted by the regulation.

“It is concerning that the Administration is moving towards allowing unapproved drugs to be used in imported food while those same drugs are banned for use here in the United States – it is a double standard,” the CFA President said.

“FDA hasn’t accounted for the thousands of small farmers who will be impacted when unapproved drugs entering the U.S. market suppress consumer safety and confidence,” he said.

The proposed regulation is the final outstanding action of the FDA prior to implementation of the Animal Drug Availability Act of 1996. The law stipulated that the Commissioner of the FDA may establish a tolerance for imported animal drug residues present in food products if the manufacturer has submitted data showing that the drug is safe.

In its formal response, CFA cited numerous studies and research that raised questions about the safety of imported fish. They included:

- Excerpts from a Government Accounting Office (GAO) report in 2011 concluding that FDA “lacks the resources to protect U.S. consumers from tainted seafood imports and that such imports – including catfish and catfish-like species – containing unknown levels of drugs and chemicals banned for use in food within our nation have entered our food chain.”

- Excerpts from a 2011 Johns

Hopkins University study confirming GAO findings that current FDA tolerances of banned and dangerous drugs in imported seafood may be too high because they rely on assumptions regarding one exposure rather than repeated exposures.

- A 2012 news release from the Centers of Disease Control and Prevention pointing out that multi-state disease outbreaks linked to imported food are on the rise, with fish the primary problem.

In his concluding remarks, CFA’s Wilson said, “We have no doubt that China and Vietnam will request tolerances for a wide range of drug and chemical agents denied to domestic products.” In doing so, “the FDA risks further tilting a competitive playing field that already favors foreign aquaculture producers who do not face the level of enforced health, safety, and labor standards met by U.S. catfish farmers.”

“America’s catfish farmers strenuously oppose the proposed rule because it opens the door to a lowering of U.S. consumer health and safety standards to accommodate foreign producers who cannot now meet the health and safety standards our farmers must live by. The rule would be potentially dangerous to consumers and unfair to producers of U.S. Farm-Raised Catfish,” Wilson stated.

FRIED CATFISH FINGERS WITH SPICY DIPPING SAUCE

Catfish Fingers:

- 2 cups white cornmeal
- Salt & freshly ground black pepper
- U.S. Farm-Raised Catfish fillets, cut into 1-inch wide strips
- Peanut oil for frying

Spicy Dipping Sauce:

Pour 2 inches of peanut oil into a deep fryer or large, heavy skillet and heat to 375° F on a deep-frying thermometer. Add catfish strips to hot oil, three at a time, and fry in a single layer for 5 minutes, turning to cook evenly. Cook until catfish is golden brown and fish flakes easily when tested with a fork. Drain on paper towels and sprinkle lightly with salt. Prepare dipping sauce 1 minute before serving catfish fingers. Mix vinegar, salt, pepper, shallot, garlic, green onions, and parsley in a small bowl. Taste and adjust seasonings if necessary.

Stir together green onion mixture, grits mixture, prawns, and next 3 ingredients. Pour into a lightly greased 2 quart baking dish. Sprinkle top with remaining 1/4 cup shredded Cheddar cheese. USDA Announces Disaster Assistance Improvements and Support for Farmers Affected by Extreme Weather

By Jennifer Yezak
Director, Office of External and Intergovernmental Affairs - USDA

Mix of Discretionary Tools and Process Improvements Will Deliver Help to Producers Suffering Effects of Extreme Weather.

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack

announced a package of program improvements that will deliver faster and more flexible assistance to farmers and ranchers devastated by natural disasters. Vilsack announced three significant improvements to decades-old USDA programs and processes related to Secretarial disaster designations: a final rule that simplifies the process for Secretarial disaster designations and will result in a 40 percent reduction in processing time for most counties affected by disasters; a reduced interest rate for emergency loans that effectively lowers the current rate from 3.75 percent to 2.25 percent; and reduces the payment reduction on Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) lands qualified for emergency haying and grazing in 2012 from 25 to 10 percent.

"Agriculture remains a bright spot in our nation's economy and it is increasingly important that USDA has the tools to act quickly and deliver assistance to farmers and ranchers when they need it most," said Vilsack. "By amending the Secretarial disaster designation, we're creating a more efficient and effective process. And by delivering lower interest rates on Emergency Loans and providing greater flexibility for haying and grazing on CRP lands, we're keeping more farmers in business and supporting our rural American communities through difficult times. With these improvements, we're also telling American producers that USDA stands with you and your communities when severe weather and natural disasters threaten to disrupt your livelihood."

A natural disaster designation makes all qualified farm operators in the designated areas eligible for low interest emergency loans. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to designate disaster counties to make disaster assistance programs available to farmers and ranchers. Previous to these changes, the process had been in place for more than two decades and regulations had not been substantively revised since 1988.

The final rule for Secretarial disaster designations is amended as follows:

- Nearly automatically qualifies a disaster county once it is categorized by the U.S. Drought Monitor as a severe drought for eight consecutive weeks during the growing season. Effective July 12, 996 counties in the United States will be designated as natural disaster areas, making all qualified farm operators in the designated areas eligible for low interest emergency loans from USDA's Farm Service Agency (FSA), provided eligibility requirements are met.

- Streamlines the USDA Secretarial designation process, which is expected to provide better service to farmers and ranchers by reducing by approximately 40 percent the amount of time required for designating a disaster area.

- Removes the requirement that a request for a disaster designation be initiated by a state governor or Indian tribal council, increasing the likelihood that counties will be covered. Indian tribal councils and governors may still submit a request for a designation, but it will not be required in order to initiate a disaster declaration.

- The same criteria currently being used for triggering a disaster designation will apply: a county must either show a 30 percent production loss of at least one crop countywide, or a decision must be made by surveying producers to determine that other lending institutions are not able to provide emergency financing.

During times of need, USDA has historically responded to disasters across the country by providing direct support, disaster assistance, technical assistance, and access to credit. USDA's low-interest emergency loans have helped producers recover from losses due to drought, flooding and other natural disasters for decades. While the current emergency loan interest rate was set in 1993 at 3.75 percent, commercial farm loan and other FSA farm loan interest rates have since been reduced without a corresponding reduction in the emergency loan rate. By reducing the interest rates to 2.25 percent, emergency loans immediately come into line with other rates in the marketplace and provide a much-needed resource for producers hoping to recover from production and physical losses associated with natural disasters.

As part of ongoing efforts to provide greater flexibility in service to American agriculture, USDA also announced that the annual rental payment by producers on CRP acres used for emergency haying or grazing will be reduced to 10 percent in 2012, instead of 25 percent, in response to the seriousness of the drought gripping large portions of the United States.

USDA encourages all farmers and ranchers to contact their crop insurance companies and local USDA Farm Service Agency Service Centers, as applicable, to report damages to crops or livestock loss. More information about federal crop insurance may be found at www.rma.usda.gov. Additional resources to help farmers and ranchers deal with flooding may be found at <http://www.usda.gov/disaster>.

Businesses, corporations, dealerships, brokers or other commercial enterprises are not allowed to advertise in the Mississippi Market Bulletin.

Agritourism Gains Popularity in State

By Susan Collins-Smith
MSU Ag Communications

Hunting and fishing have always been popular in Mississippi, but landowners are now adding wildlife watching, horseback riding, and other agricultural entertainment businesses, such as pumpkin patches and bed and breakfasts, to the mix.

Daryl Jones, an associate Extension professor in Mississippi State University's Forest and Wildlife Research Center, said outdoor recreation involving hunting, angling and wildlife watching generates $2.7 billion annually and represents more than 71,000 Mississippi jobs. Agritainment, which includes farm tours, corn mazes, and U-pick fruit and vegetable plots, generates another $150 million annually in the state and is one of the fastest growing tourism markets.

"Agritourism has increased 30 percent compared to other tourism sectors in Mississippi," Jones said. "People remember that November morning when they went hunting with Granddaddy and the feeling they had when that covey of quail exploded in front of pointing dogs. They want to experience that again and have their children experience it with them."

Landowners in Mississippi can offer those experiences and add value to their current agricultural operations by starting agritourism enterprises.

"Outdoor recreation on private lands adds as much as $654 of value per acre, or an increase of 52 percent," Jones said. "Outdoor recreational businesses fit very well into existing agriculture and forestry production procedures. Many practices that farmers use in their current operations, such as prescribed burning and managing field borders, are beneficial to wildlife. Consequently, these same practices support recreational enterprises on the farm that promote income diversification and conservation. For a lot of people, it can be a complementary scenario."

Jones said multiple enterprises are sometimes a good option. A turkey hunting enterprise could expand its business by using the same blinds and trails for bird watching and horseback riding other times of the year.

Jo Lynn Mitchell had done her research when she first expressed a desire to add a pumpkin patch to the family farm in Collins.

"It took me two years to convince my family that this would work," she told a crowd of 88 at a natural resources enterprises workshop June 26 in Jackson. "But I had done my research, and I knew we could be successful."

Mitchell's family grows peanuts, blueberries, corn, peaches, wheat, and soybeans on the 50-year-old farm. In 2006, the family opened the pumpkin patch, which offers wagon rides, group tours for children and adults, a corn maze, interaction with farm animals, and a play area. They also offer their venue for weddings and other events.

"The pumpkin patch has been a huge success," Mitchell said. "We well exceeded our expected numbers the first year, and they have been growing each year since."

She said the farm's website has contributed to the success of the family's agritourism venture.

"Word-of-mouth is the best advertisement, but the website is the second best form of advertising. We had visitors from Norway one year. They were visiting Texas, saw our website and decided to come over to Mississippi to see us while they were here," Mitchell said.

Besides diversifying the farm's enterprises, the pumpkin patch is providing an educational opportunity for kids and adults.

"We have kids come who don't have any idea what a farm is all about," Mitchell said. "When we ask the kids where corn comes from, they say the store. We live in a rural community, and it is amazing that kids don't understand where their food comes from. So we feel like this endeavor is significant on many levels."

The passage of Mississippi Senate Bill 2439 earlier this year gives landowners added liability protection. The law went into effect July 1.

Mississippi Commissioner of Agriculture and Commerce Cindy Hyde-Smith said the details of the law have yet to be worked out, but it will provide protection for landowners who post the proper signage. The law comes up for renewal in two years and may be amended then.

"I am so thrilled we got this passed because agritourism opens so many avenues for Mississippi, and a lot of people would not take a chance on an agritourism business without this law," Hyde-Smith said at the natural resources enterprises workshop.

Jones said the law protects landowners as long as they make reasonable efforts to keep their property safe and warns visitors of any known hazards.

MS Gulf Shrimp Landings Are Good, But Prices Down

The shrimp are slightly bigger, but prices are down, making this year's season-opening in Biloxi comparable to last year's start.

During the first two weeks of the 2012 season, 1.137 million pounds of shrimp were landed in Biloxi. In the same time in 2011, 1.124 million pounds were landed at the same port. Shrimp season began May 30, and 210 boats went out for the opening day. To date, the bulk of the production has been medium, 36- to 40-count shrimp, a reference to the number of shrimp needed to make a pound.

Dave Burrage, commercial and recreational fisheries specialist with the Mississippi State University Extension Service, said a majority of the early crop harvested last year was the smaller, 50- to 60-count size.

"We are getting good-sized shrimp, but not a good price for the fishermen," Burrage said.

Medium shrimp are bringing about $1.50 a pound, and small shrimp are getting $1 to $1.10 a pound. The large, under 15-count shrimp are selling off the boat for $2.85 a pound with heads on and $4.35 a pound for tails."

Burrage, who works at the Coastal Research and Extension Center in Biloxi, said mild weather over the last several months helped production and size in this year's shrimp crop.

"We didn't have any winter to speak of, and the shrimp grew fast," Burrage said. "The oil spill of 2010 is behind us, as are the closings that happened last year when the Bonnet Carre' Spillway was opened to handle flooding in other areas."

High winds have prompted small craft advisories, so smaller shrimp boats are either staying docked or working in less productive locations where the weather is better.

Percy Bradley of Long Beach is owner and captain of the Kar-Lyn Dawn, a shrimp boat that works out of the Pass Christian harbor. He has been in the shrimp business since 1973.

"We had a good opening for the first couple of days, then we hit a dead zone, and then it got better after the wind," Bradley said. "The shrimp come through in schools. They don't stop anymore; they just pass through."

With low prices, shrimpers are squeezed to make a profit.

"Diesel is killing us," Bradley said. "You used to be able to work for two to three 100-pound boxes of shrimp a night. Now it takes 200 pounds of shrimp just to pay for diesel and another 100 pounds to pay for crew."

With today's high production costs and low prices, Bradley said a shrimper needs to catch about 500 pounds of shrimp to have a decent night's work.

Burrage said the three major challenges facing shrimpers recur every year.

"Cheaper, imported product is putting the pressure on the price of domestic product; operating costs, primarily diesel fuel, are high; and increased regulation," Burrage said.

The average consumer buys shrimp based on price, not quality, and the Mississippi wild-caught shrimp industry has to do a better job marketing their superior product, he said.

Traci Floyd, shrimp and crab bureau director with the Mississippi Department of Marine Resources in Biloxi, said there is plenty of evidence the shrimp are safe to eat.

"Our Gulf of Mexico shrimp are some of the most-tested shrimp in the world," Floyd said. "Although it's too early to tell how the whole season will be, we're pleased with the amount of shrimp being harvested. It looks like we'll have an average year, and average is good sometimes."

Shrimp season closes December 31 north of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway, where the smaller shrimpers fish, and it closes April 30, 2013, south of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway.

The Office of Program Evaluation, Enforcement, and Review (OPEER) Division of USDA recently presented a 16-year service and appreciation award to Tommy Gholston for his work in the area of investigating compliance with State and Federal Meat Inspection Laws.
