Late Rains Not Stopping Good Sweet Potato Yield

By Bonnie Coblenz
MSU Ag Communications

Mississippi's soil and climate are ideally suited to producing sweet potatoes, a crop that gives the state a No. 2 national ranking.

Harvest began about August 20 on Mississippi's 22,500 acres of sweet potatoes. North Carolina comes in first with 64,000 acres. Acreage in both states varied little from last year. The Mississippi crop was valued at nearly $66.5 million in 2011.

Bill Burdine, Mississippi State University Extension Service area

agronomy agent in Chickasaw County, works with sweet potatoes. He said the state's overall crop is slightly above average and yields are consistent.

"Our sweet potato crop is looking good overall," Burdine said. "Late rains lowered the soil temperature and reduced some of the growth of the plants. Some potatoes in low-lying areas of poorly drained fields rotted, but this was more of a scare than an actual loss."

The U.S. Department of Agriculture estimated the crop was 46 percent harvested by September 23, which put it slightly ahead of schedule for the last five years.

Benny Graves, executive director of the Mississippi Sweet Potato Council in Vardaman, said the state's average yield is 275 bushels per acre of the desirable size No. 1s and No. 2s. This year's harvest should be in that range.

"There are some pretty potatoes going into the bins. Mississippi growers grade and pack a really consistent, high quality sack of sweet potatoes," Graves said.

The majority of the state's sweet potatoes are grown within 40 miles of Vardaman. Graves said the right soil and climate, several generations of sweet potato growing knowledge, and a good industry infrastructure combine to make the area ideal for sweet potato production.

Mississippi producers typically grow enough sweet potatoes to sell their product year-round. By the time bins are nearly empty, the new crop is coming in from the fields. North Carolina, with its larger production, had two years of exceptionally good crops. Many of their potatoes are still in storage, keeping prices low, said Ken Hood, Extension agricultural economist.

"Sweet potato prices range from $15 to $16 per 40-pound box for No. 1 grade at the packing house in Mississippi," Hood said. "No. 2s are $10 to $11 a box, while Jumbos are $8 to $9 a box."

Hood said Mississippi missed the drought that decimated much of the nation's agriculture. Yields looked to be well above average before the late rains reduced them by as much as 20 percent.

"Overall, the increase in yields in the other 80 percent will have us a little above average for the total crop," Hood said.

Demand for sweet potatoes continues to grow, and new products are arriving on the market. Hood said Americans now consume about 5.7 pounds of sweet potatoes per person each year.

"Fresh market potatoes remain strong, and the increase in consumption in value-added potato products continues to drive the demand," Hood said.

Heartworm Prevention Remains Best Defense

By Susan Collins-Smith
MSU Ag Communications

The surge in heartworm-positive animals, some of them on preventatives, has stirred debate about the cause and worries pet owners.

"The high incidence of positive cases in the Delta has made some of our clients very nervous," said Dr. Edwin Nordan, a veterinarian at Greenville Animal Clinic and Hospital. "Some have installed pesticide misting systems around the exterior of their homes to help reduce the number of mosquitoes their pets are exposed to. I understand their anxiety. We deal with positive cases every day, and it is a serious disease."

Heartworm disease is a potentially fatal infection transmitted by mosquitoes to dogs, cats, and other mammals. Preventatives are relatively inexpensive medication given monthly that keep the parasite from maturing and eventually damaging the arteries of the animal's lungs and heart. Dogs are more often affected by heartworms.

Veterinarians say preventative treatment is still a pet's best defense.

"There are many factors associated with a successful heartworm prevention protocol," said Dr. Wally Mullen, an assistant clinical professor at Mississippi State University's College of Veterinary Medicine. "Right now veterinary medicine cannot definitively answer why there is such an increase in positive cases. All the different preventatives are still considered to be highly effective, especially when you compare the number of doses given to the number of cases associated with an unexplained lack of effectiveness."

Nordan and Dr. Bryant Anderson, also a veterinarian at Greenville

Animal Clinic and Hospital, see the disease on a daily basis. Like many other veterinarians, they suspect the increase is most likely caused by more than one factor.

"The Delta has a large population of mosquitos and a species of mosquito that feeds all day long. So animals in the Delta presumably have a higher incidence of exposure," Anderson said. "The dog's immune system plays a role in fighting off infection. And different dogs metabolize medication differently. Medications will act longer in some dogs than in others and at various speeds."

"Preventatives are not active for the entire 30 days between doses. That is why it is so important for owners to strictly adhere to the correct dosing schedule," he said.

Other factors contributing to the increase in positive cases include the spread of existing mosquito species and the introduction of new ones, climate changes, urban sprawl, relocation of heartworm-positive companion animals and improper administration of heartworm preventatives and treatments.

The incidence of positive cases decreased between 2007 and 2010. However, numbers are still above those recorded before 2002. In hotbed areas, such as the Mississippi Delta, some reporting clinics were still seeing more than 100 heartworm positive animals per year in 2010, according to the American Heartworm Society.

Pet owners are urged to take pets to a veterinarian on a regular basis and follow current recommendations for heartworm prevention. Dog owners should start puppies on preventatives as early as possible. Even those with indoor-only pets should treat their animals every single month. Limit pets' outdoor activity during cooler times of the day, when mosquitos feed more. Eliminate standing water where mosquitos can breed and have pets tested for heartworms at least once a year.

"Some people mistakenly believe that if they give the preventative at some point during every month, their pets are protected," Anderson said. "That is not the case. For example, if a pet gets medication on September 1 and again on October 7, there is a reasonable window of opportunity for a heartworm infection to occur."

"Ideally, clients should give preventatives every 30 days, especially in the Delta and other areas that are experiencing extremely high numbers of positive cases," Anderson said. "Giving the medication on the same day of the month every month is also acceptable."

Always be sure the pet ingests the pill, and never split single doses of medication among multiple pets. The active ingredient in individual pills is not evenly distributed, so sharing pills would leave pets unprotected. If the pet vomits within the first hour of swallowing the medication, wait 24 hours and give another full dose of medication, Anderson said.

Update Containers For Fall With Persian Shield

By Gary R. Bachman
MSU Horticulturist
Coastal Research & Extension Center

As we move into fall I've been paying attention to the combination containers that have looked so good through the summer months. Many of the flowering plants have started to fade. Colorful foliage plants can now transition from supporting roles to the stars of the containers.

One foliage plant in particular has been a standout lately. Persian shield, which is known botanically as Strobilanthus dyerianus, is typically considered a houseplant. But when added to a combination container, it has a lot of potential as a landscape plant.

Persian shield's elliptically shaped leaves can be up to eight inches long. The foliage is shades of purple, pink, and silver and has an iridescent sheen. The colors are more prominent when the plant is exposed to lots of light and are muted when it is planted in the shade. Morning sun is best for color development, but I have seen combination containers with a western exposure that have been absolutely breathtaking. Prominent bright green veins that contrast with the other colors are particularly attractive.

Persian shield likes to grow in a well-drained potting mix or landscape soil. For best growth, the soil needs to be consistently moist, whether in a container or in the landscape. Applying a water-soluble fertilizer every other week will keep growth vigorous and steady. If you prefer, you can apply a monthly dose of 14-14-14 or a similar controlled-release fertilizer.

At times, Persian shield may appear to be getting a little leggy. It can reach as high as four feet if left alone. Don't be afraid to do a bit of corrective pruning. This plant will respond well, and a little trimming will keep growth bushy and dense.

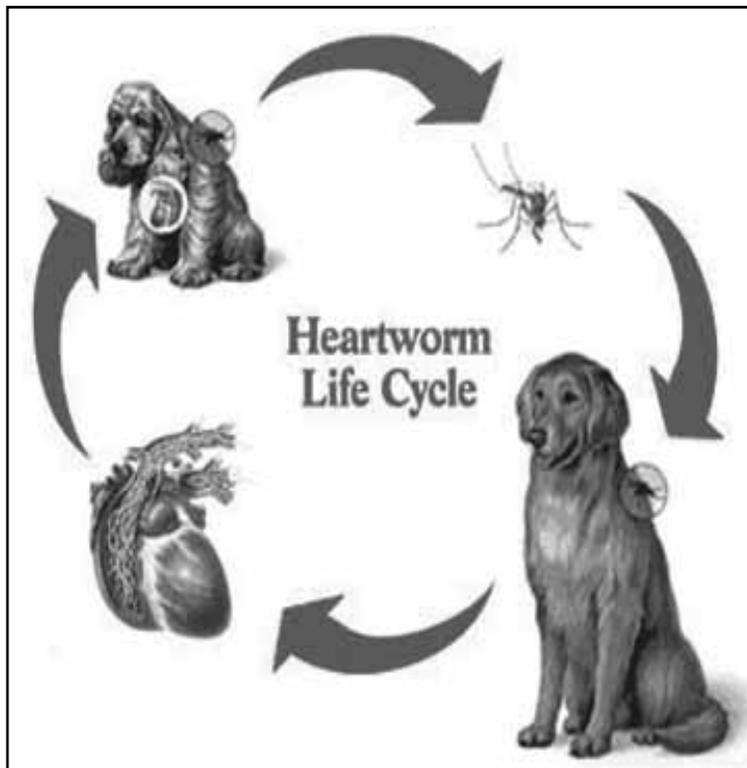

Because Persian shield is typically grown as a houseplant, it will overwinter very well. You could re-pot the plant and move it inside for the winter months. But if the plant is big, this method may be a little cumbersome in small indoor spaces.

Another easy way to overwinter Persian shield is to take cuttings. Remove four to six inches of growth from the end of a stem. Place in a glass of water on your windowsill, and roots will soon form. When transplanting cuttings into a small container, use good potting mix.

While it's late in the year to be planting combination containers, consider using Persian shield in at least one of your combination containers for next year and after.

Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce and Mississippi Department of Education Celebrate Farm to School Week at Rouse Elementary School

By Paige Manning
Director of Marketing and Public Relations - MDAC

The Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce and the Mississippi Department of Education held the first Farm to School Week Celebration on October 2 at Rouse Elementary in Brandon, Mississippi. Students had the opportunity to dine with special guests including Governor Phil Bryant, Agriculture Commissioner Cindy Hyde-Smith, Interim Deputy State Superintendent of Education Dr. Kim Benton, Director of Child Nutrition and Healthy Schools Scott Clements, and the actual growers of many of the items featured on the menu.

Local farmers, including Jerry Hutto of Waynesboro, Louis Guedon of Natchez, Allen Eubanks of Lucedale, and Becky Beard representing the Mississippi Poultry Association, spoke to Rouse Elementary first grade students to discuss the importance of agriculture and eating healthy fruits and vegetables. Students then escorted the farmers and state officials to the cafeteria, where Mississippi-raised chicken, locally-grown peas, grape tomatoes, cucumbers, and blueberries were served.

"By using Mississippi farm products in our school cafeterias, we can connect our students with the food they eat and teach them about the relationship between nutrition and health," said Governor Phil Bryant. "Not only will we be supporting our farmers and our agricultural economy, Mississippi children will learn important lessons about making smart health choices. I appreciate Agriculture Commissioner Cindy Hyde-Smith for spearheading this effort in our schools," added Bryant.

Agriculture Commissioner Cindy Hyde-Smith commented, "It's wonderful to see students excited about eating Mississippi grown foods right here in our school cafeterias. By providing nutritious locally-grown fruits, vegetables, and other food items to our students, we are not only opening up marketing opportunities for our farmers, we are also educating students on where their food is coming from. The Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce is proud of our partnership with the Mississippi Department of Education and the efforts being made to purchase fruits and vegetables direct from our farmers."

Through a Farm to School Program, the Mississippi Department of Education and the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce have made successful efforts to increase the amount of fruits and vegetables grown in the state that are served in lunchrooms across Mississippi. "The Mississippi Department of Education has worked with the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce for over ten years to provide Mississippi students with healthy meals and to support our local farmers. Through this partnership, thousands of cases of locally grown fruits and vegetables will be delivered to Mississippi schools this year. The Farm to School program increases student consumption of fruits and vegetables and helps students make better nutritional choices," stated Scott Clements, Director of Child Nutrition and Healthy Schools for the Mississippi Department of Education.

The first week in October was designated as Mississippi Farm to School Week by the Mississippi Legislature earlier this year. Farm to School Week was introduced to encourage the serving of locally grown and locally raised agricultural products in school meals and to recognize the substantial economic health benefits of farm to school programs. During this first week of October, many schools around the state are incorporating Mississippi grown products, including produce, into their menus. Farm to School Week will draw attention to the vast number of crops that are grown in the state as well as serve as an educational tool to teach children where their food comes from. October was designated as National Farm to School Month, by the National Farm to School Network, founded in 2007. Farm to School programs exist in all 50 states. School officials that would like more resources regarding Farm to School Week and Farm to School Month can visit www.farmtoschoolweek.org, a website created by the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce.

Students had the opportunity to talk to Louis Guedon of Church Hill Produce in Natchez who produced the peas that were served for lunch.
