Timber Markets Provide Barometers for Economy

By Linda Breazeale
MSU Ag Communications

Evidence of a healthy national economy may be found in the strength of the timber industry.

Forestry is a billion-dollar industry in Mississippi and the state's second-largest agricultural commodity. A depressed national economy in recent years had negative impacts on housing construction and furniture manufacturing, which hurt the forestry sector, but industry experts are seeing signs that a recovery is at hand.

"2013 is looking better than 2012 and much better than the last several years following the recession," said James Henderson, assistant Extension professor of forestry at Mississippi State University. "The recovery for Mississippi's timber markets will take time, but everything is finally heading in the right direction."

Henderson said housing starts are on the rise, and demand is exceeding supply for both housing and building materials.

"The composite price for framing lumber for May is up 13.6 percent from the same period last year, but stumpage prices for pine sawtimber are not rebounding as quickly," he said. "In the first quarter of 2013, Mississippi pine sawtimber average stumpage fell to $26.07 per ton. By comparison, pine sawtimber averaged $39.71 per ton in the first quarter of 2007."

Henderson said one issue that will keep prices from rising more quickly will be the accumulated inventory of standing timber. Since the decline in the U.S. housing market, the rate of timber harvesting has been much lower, resulting in accumulation of standing timber.

"The Mississippi Institute for Forest Inventory is estimating that standing pine sawtimber volume was up by more than 40 percent since the last statewide inventory was conducted starting in 2005," he said. "Housing is projected to be back at a production level of about 1.5 million units a year by 2015 or

At that point, stumpage prices for pine should reflect the resulting increase in demand with modest increases. Additionally, the reduction of standing inventories as timber harvesting increases will boost prices.

David Jones, assistant forest products professor with MSU's Extension Service, said all timber products follow housing starts.

"Mills in Mississippi have increased production, and some that were offline are operational again," he said. "The expansions are a significant change from the last five years, when most reports were closures."

Jones said opening new facilities, reopening existing businesses and expanding production can affect a whole community.

"We are hearing announcements of new mills opening, such as the plywood plant in Louisville and pellet mills in south Mississippi. The Port of Pascagoula is dredging the river for barges to carry wood pellets overseas," Jones said. "The communities closest to these mills will see a direct economic impact."

Because supplies are somewhat lower than demand, Jones said product prices have also increased. Additionally, natural disasters contribute to a bump in prices by putting a stress on supply.

Pulp Prices: Have We Hit the 2013 High?

By Suz-Anne Kinney
Forest2Market

Where are pulp prices, and where are they headed?

According to the Forestweb North American Pulp Index, which is published by Industry Intelligence, pulp prices fell below the five-year trend line in November 2011 and remain there today.

How long will pulp prices remain below the trend?

The chart to the right shows the current market level in context of the last four years. While the market is considerably stronger than it was at the recession's nadir in 2009, it is well below both 2010 and 2011 levels. In fact, 2013 so far is tracking almost exactly as 2012 did.

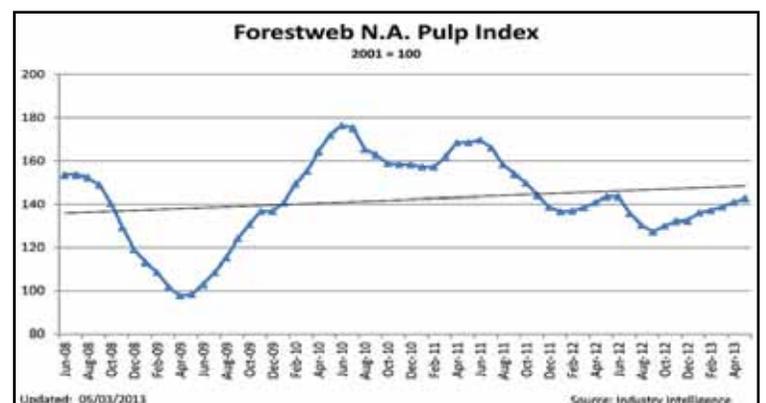

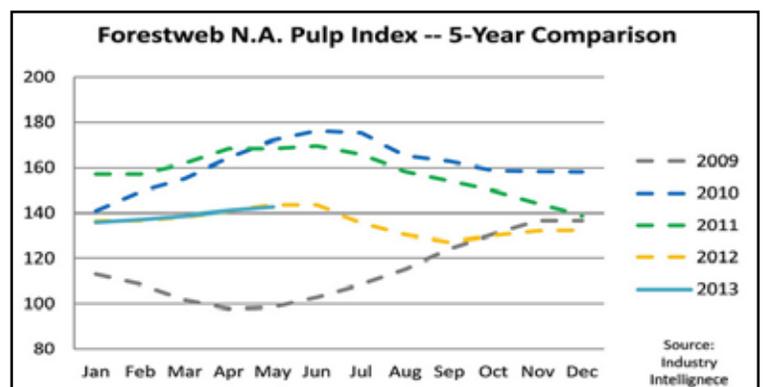

Will pulp prices crawl out of the dungeon in 2013?

The answer to both this question and the preceding one can be found in the next figure to the right. If we normalize the Forestweb index by pegging the yearly high at 100 percent and all other prices as a percentage of that high, we can see that for each of the last three years, the market high for the year occurred in either May or June.

To date in 2013, it appears that we are at or near the market high for the year. Recent announcements by West Fraser, Domtar and Canfor that they increased NBSK prices $20/tonne (to $950/tonne) by June 1 indicate that a little more room for upward movement may still be on the table for 2013. Whether or not some or all of this increase goes into effect, it is likely that we will have seen the market high for the year at the end of June. And if the high for the year does happen at the end of the second quarter, prices are unlikely to climb above the five-year trend line in 2013.

The Doctor Will See You Now

By Lise Foy, Director
MS Agriculture & Forestry Museum

With all the talk of the Mississippi Healthcare Corridor development in Jackson, a five-mile urban corridor linking two cross-continental interstate highways from I-55 to I-220, it makes you really appreciate how far Mississippi healthcare has come over the past decade.

The planned development promoted by the Greater Jackson Chamber Partnership (www.greaterjacksonpartnership.com) could be a tremendous economic driver for our state, including the Jackson Medical Mall, surrounded by colleges and universities including three historic institutions, amenities like an 18-hole golf course, the Jackson Zoo, and an executive airport. New signage, green space, lighting, and landscaping would complement a concourse for hotels, shops, restaurants, and nightlife to create a new destination in our capitol city.

The description of this project paints a much different picture of healthcare than the collection of 1920s medicinal artifacts on display in the Doctor's Office in Small Town, Mississippi at the Ag Museum. The things on the shelves represent Mississippi medicine of a century ago. The doctor might have prescribed tobacco products and some form of alcohol to cure what ailed you. Remedies like magnetic oil, fluid extract of rhubarb, chigger lotion, camphorated opium, syrup of hemoglobin, and Pinex cough syrup can be found in the Doctor's Office exhibit and would have been recommended to treat your ailment during that time period. The bottles are all empty, by the way, just in case you were getting any ideas.

During the first three decades of the 1900s, improved medical technology, cooperation among health care programs, and the development and passage of positive legislation contributed to better public health in Mississippi. By 1920, legislation had been passed, which authorized counties to develop health departments, authorized towns and counties to appropriate funds for disease prevention, increased appropriations for the State Board of Health which established a sanatorium for the treatment and prevention of tuberculosis and required applicants for medical license to be graduates of recognized medical schools.

The State Board of Health and affiliated agencies were responsible for conducting a campaign of systematic municipal sanitary inspection and establishing the Division of Sanitary Engineering forming and gradually expanding the responsibilities of the Bureau of Vital Statistics, hiring full-time agency physicians and nurses and conducting experiments and programs in a concerted effort to eradicate hookworm disease, pellagra, malaria, yellow fever, tuberculosis, and small pox. Cases of typhoid fever, diphtheria, influenza and tetanus, as well as infant and maternal mortality rates were also reduced because of improved sanitary conditions and public health care.

Originally constructed in 1905, the Doctor's Office building in Small Town once belonged to Dr. John Whitworth Melvin who practiced medicine in Camden, Mississippi, for the duration of his career. The community of Camden is located in northeast Madison County, and to this day, there are people who live in the Camden, Cameron, Canton, and Sharon communities who bear the name 'Melvin' because they were delivered by Dr. Melvin. He was born in 1887 and died in 1949 making him only 62 at the time of his death. He attended High School at French Camp and graduated from Tulane University School of Medicine in 1911. Within that same year, he went into partnership with his father-in-law, Dr. J. M. Shelby.

Although Dr. Melvin had regular 8:00 to 5:00 office hours, he was always on call and spent about fifty percent of his time on house calls. He usually made house calls by automobile and within a twelve mile radius of Camden. He often left word of his where-abouts at the neighboring drugstore and his patients would often wait on the front porch for his return when he was out.

Like most other physicians during this time, Dr. Melvin routinely performed baby deliveries and provided prenatal and postnatal care. Other services were the diagnosis and treatment of common illnesses and emergency treatment for accident victims. Surgery in the office was usually limited to tonsillectomies, appendectomies, and removal of cysts. Patients who needed more complicated surgery were usually transported to the nearest hospital or infirmary. Dr. Melvin drove his patients himself from Camden to the infirmary in Jackson.

Dr. Melvin was usually paid in cash on a running account basis, but it was not uncommon to be paid with chickens, turkeys, watermelons, and other produce. Try offering some vegetables as payment next time you see your doctor!

The Ag Museum is located at 1150 Lakeland Drive in Jackson and is open Monday through Saturday from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. In addition to our gallery and exhibit spaces, the Ag Museum also has room for your event, whether it's a meeting, a wedding or other special event. Call (601) 432-4500 for information.

Advertising Guidelines

The Mississippi Market Bulletin is published on the 1st and 15th of each month by the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce. The Mississippi Market Bulletin is an important way for the Department to disseminate news and information about issues affecting Mississippi's agriculture industry and the Department's operations.

Through its classified advertising section, the Bulletin provides a forum for Mississippi residents to buy and sell agricultural related items while also giving statewide exposure to small farmers who might not normally have the economic resources for such widespread advertising. The Bulletin does not publish commercial or display ads and all items offered for sale must have been produced, raised, grown or operated on the seller's property. Businesses, corporations, dealerships, brokers or other commercial enterprises are not allowed to advertise in the Mississippi Market Bulletin.

State's Cotton Gains Ground In Planting

By Bonnie Coblentz
MSU Ag Communications

A week of mostly ideal weather allowed Mississippi producers to more than double the acreage planted in cotton, but they remain behind schedule with this year's crop.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) estimated the cotton crop went from 36 to 77 percent planted in the week ending June 2, and many days were favorable since then. The state typically has 93 percent of its cotton acreage planted by this time, but the situation is not quite as bleak as it had been.

Darrin Dodds, cotton specialist with the Mississippi State University Extension Service, said growers made up a lot of ground after Memorial Day.

"It's amazing how quickly soil went from way too wet to dry," Dodds said. "It finally got hot, the wind started blowing, and the ground dried up quickly. Producers across the state were able to get a lot of planting done this week."

USDA originally estimated that cotton acreage would drop to 199,000, but when weather delayed corn planting, that prediction increased to 340,000 acres of cotton. However, continuing wet weather delayed cotton planting, and Dodds said he now expects the state to have about 300,000 acres of cotton when the planting window closes.

"It's been a challenging year just getting the crop planted, and we've seen as much as 20 percent of the acreage replanted," Dodds said. "As soon as the ground was dry enough for equipment to get across it, cotton was planted. But shortly after that, we got a hard, packing rain, and then it dried out. Much of the cotton just couldn't get through this hard layer and had to be replanted."

Once the last of the cotton has been planted or replanted, growers will focus their efforts on helping it mature as quickly as possible.

Angus Catchot, Extension agronomic crops entomologist, said managing insect pressure can help the cotton stay on track. Significant insect pressure can delay the crop as the plants put time and energy into foliage rather than boll production.

"Thrips have already become a problem in cotton, but this is not unusual. Thrips are a problem from emergence until the plants get about four true leaves," Catchot said. "Thrips are less of an issue when cotton is growing quickly, but this year, the cotton is just getting started."

Growers are encouraged to aggressively treat thrips so these insects do not delay the crop. Catchot said once thrips are in check, spider mites often become an issue, and growers must spray crops to prevent problems from this insect.

"We've got a lot of data that suggests that anytime you push the cotton crop late in the Midsouth, it exposes us to bigger populations of insects that have had time to build," Catchot said. "As the season progresses, these insects are harder to control."

tor in Coahoma County, said farmers are somewhat discouraged and concerned about the late start to the cotton crop. Coahoma County historically grows more cotton than any other county in Mississippi.

"Folks are really down in the mouth. We've had two tremendous crops in the last two years, and they think that whatever they're able to plant now won't make a harvest like that," Respass said.

He said he expects growers in the county to plant 40,000 to 50,000 acres of cotton, which is higher than originally anticipated but lower than the typical 65,000 acres planted.

"Earlier this spring, we thought we'd see more corn than cotton for the first time in Coahoma County's history, but many acres of corn didn't get planted, so that didn't happen," Respass said. "We're a cotton county."

Even in the Delta, cotton planting has reached the end of its ideal planting window. Acreage that remains unplanted past the first week of June likely will be planted in soybeans.

The labeling requirements for basa, swai, and tra will be the same as catfish.

- For catfish, basa, swai, and tra, the food service establishment must include a statement adjacent to the item on the menu stating the country of origin and the method of production in the same font size and style. "Menu" includes any listing of food and beverage options for a diner or customer to select from regardless of its form.

However, if the catfish, basa, swai, or tra is produced in the United States, then the food service establishment may generally disclose the U.S. country of origin in a prominent location, such as a wall sign or table tent.

The Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce (MDAC) is charged with enforcing this law. The Law provides that the Department may take administrative action for the failure to comply with the Law, including administrative penalties and stop sales.

MSU Flower Gardens Test New Varieties

By Bonnie Coblentz

Many frustrated gardeners have noted how plants often look their best on retail shelves, but ongoing tests at Mississippi State University helps these gardeners figure out which flowers will meet expectations.

Gary Bachman, horticulturist with the MSU Extension Service at the Coastal Research and Extension Center in Biloxi, said the university currently tests flower selections at two sites. Plans are underway to conduct flower variety testing at five locations around the state soon.

"Mississippi State is one of the organizations that companies across the country send plants to for testing," Bachman said. "These selections are planted according to specific guidelines, and we follow strict criteria in evaluating the plants."

Data collected from test sites is compiled to present an accurate picture of the plants' performance in various settings. These carefully monitored experiments are called variety trials.

Information from variety trials is used to determine the best zones and conditions for the plants. It is also used to confer honors such as All-America Selection status or Mississippi Medallion winner.

Bachman said MSU has been conducting plant trials at Poplarville for the longest, and it has conducted variety trials at Crystal Springs for at least 37 years.

"The test site at the South Mississippi Research and Extension Center in Poplarville is designed more for commercial growers and is part of the All-America Selections system," Bachman said. "The Truck Crops Branch Experiment Station at Crystal Springs is the home of the very popular Fall Flower and Garden Fest, and it is designed more for consumers."

Both sites take in plants given to them by plant companies and evaluate them over the years. The Mis-issippi Medallion designations use data from both these MSU locations.

Bachman has a goal of establishing flower trial locations at each of the state's four Research and Extension Centers and on MSU's main campus in Starkville. These locations will cover the state's four U.S. Department of Agriculture planting zones, which range from 9a on the Gulf Coast to 7b in north Mississippi. In addition to Poplarville and Biloxi, MSU has Research and Extension Centers in Verona and Raymond.

"This will give us some replicated data for how plants perform across Mississippi, and this information can be used anytime a plant is evaluated," Bachman said.

In addition to gathering careful research data, these trial gardens give gardeners -- both professional and casual -- a chance to see the plants in action. Visitors can see firsthand how big plants get, what colors they produce in blooms, what their foliage looks like, and even how the plants will look when grown in combination with others.

Guihong Bi, an associate research professor with the Mississippi Agricultural and Forestry Experiment Station in Crystal Springs, said the test sites help bridge the gaps between companies, producers, and consumers.

"Throughout the year, a lot of people come here to visit our site, including commercial growers, company representatives, and the public," Bi said. "Over the years, I have seen growers take notes and use this information to schedule production and make an order once they have seen the plant in action."

Those interested in seeing the variety trials at the Truck Crops Branch in Crystal Springs can come to the Mid-South Green Industry Conference in June or the Fall Flower and Garden Fest in October.

Those interested in seeing the variety trials at Poplarville can come to the Ornamental Horticulture Field Day in October or visit the station during business hours.

Recent Changes to the Mississippi Catfish Marketing Law

By Gene Robertson,
Deputy Director
Bureau of Regulatory Services - MDAC

Current Mississippi Law requires that food service establishments, which include restaurants, snack bars, delis, etc., provide the consumer, with the country of origin and method of production of catfish. After July 1, 2013, food service establishments must also inform the consumer of the country of origin and method of production of basa, swai,
