Buy Christmas Trees Early to Get Best Options

By Kaitlyn Byrne
MSU Ag Communications

Thanks to impressive live Christmas tree sales last year, customers seeking the best Christmas trees may need to buy early this year.

Stephen Dicke, Mississippi State University Extension Service professor, said Christmas tree farms experienced a 15 percent increase in sales in 2012 and expect an additional 7 percent increase in this year's sales.

"The inventory of Christmas trees will be tight because sales last year were so good that producers had to sell part of this year's crop," Dicke said. "The best-looking trees are going to go faster than usual, so waiting to purchase a Christmas tree until the last minute is not recommended."

Dicke said many Mississippians are trying to return to traditional Christmas celebrations, which include live Christmas trees. He said producers are trying to meet this increase in demand, but because it takes about four years to grow a Christmas tree, they are struggling to respond quickly enough.

"Producers are trying to shorten rotations and plant more trees, but it's going to take a while to catch up to the demand because of growth time," he said. "Christmas tree sales aren't hurt by the economy because even when people stay home, they are going to buy a tree."

Dicke said most Mississippi Christmas tree growers open the Friday after Thanksgiving and will sell out the week before Christmas. Dicke said some growers will allow early pre-tagging for customers who want a special size or type of tree.

"The average customer is looking for a 7-foot tall tree that is 5 to 6 feet wide, but not everyone is average," Dicke said. "Therefore, most Christmas tree producers provide both larger and smaller trees, ranging from 5 to 10 feet tall, to fit the needs of the customer."

Bob Shearer of Purvis, produces Christmas trees on 2.5 acres in Lamar County, and his Leighton Green Cypress tree won grand champion for the three-state Southern Christmas Tree Association in 2013. Shearer said the weather cooperated to help this year's tree crop succeed, which is crucial because the increase in demand makes every tree count.

"We had adequate rain when we needed it, but we had enough time between rainfall for fungicide applications to make sure we got disease-free trees," Shearer said. "It has really been one of our best years in regards to weather."

Shearer said the Christmas spirit can be hard to find while working on the trees year-round, especially in summer heat. He said the hard work pays off, though, when he sees the impact his trees have on others' Christmas season.

"What makes it worthwhile is when we have groups of children with special needs from local schools come out and choose a tree for their classroom," he said. "Some of them are in wheelchairs or on crutches and some have mental disabilities, and it tugs at my heartstrings because I can tell they are going to face a lot of challenges in life. But they light up like it's Christmas day when they see the Christmas trees, and that's kind of the high point of my whole season."

Christmas tree farm tree prices vary based on the size of the tree, but expect to pay between $5 and $8 per foot.

MDAC Focus on Consumer Protection Heightened This Holiday Season

By Julie McLemore, Bureau Director
Regulatory Services - MDAC

With the holiday season approaching, many Mississippians will be buying turkeys, hams, and other meat products for celebrations with their families. Due to the season, the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce (MDAC) usually sees an increase in "door-to-door" meat sales. The Department recommends that a consumer ask questions of door-to-door meat vendors to ensure that the consumer is getting a safe meat product. "One way to confirm the vendor is legitimate is to ask to see his or her retail food mobile establishment license from the Department," advised Cindy Hyde-Smith, Commissioner. "If a vendor has a current license," Hyde-Smith said, "then they have been required to meet certain sanitation regulations required by the Department."

In addition to asking to see an up-to-date license, the Department recommends these tips for consumers when approached by a door-to-door meat vendor:

- Read the label on the package before you buy. If there is no inspection legend, either by the United States Department of Agriculture or the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce, then the product has not been inspected as required by law.
- If the establishment number where the meat or poultry was inspected is not on the product, then question the salesperson about that. The inspection legend must contain the establishment number.
- Confirm that the product is being transported in a refrigerated vehicle. Meat and poultry products for sale by mobile vendors must be sold from a refrigerated vehicle and not from a cooler contained in the vehicle.

Recently, thanks to an attentive consumer, the Department investigated a door-to-door mobile vendor selling hams without a license in the Brookhaven area. The mobile vendor was selling adulterated hams and had forged the Department's mark of inspection on the hams. The Department fined the vendor $5,600.00 for multiple violations of the law. "While food safety inspectors from the Department are working every day to maintain a safe food supply for Mississippians, consumer tips, like this one from Brookhaven, are a very essential component to ensuring food safety," said Julie McLemore, Director of the Department's Bureau of Regulatory Services. Please contact the Department's Consumer Protection Division if you have a concern about a door-to-door vendor at 601-359-1148.

Before There Were Planes, Trains, and Automobiles

By Lise Foy, Director
MS Agriculture & Forestry Museum

Transportation has evolved quite a bit since the mid 1800's. Prior to the development of the railroad, travel was by horse, wagon, or boat. Through the course of Mississippi's history, the way farmers have been able to receive and ship products has greatly influenced their lifestyle. The Heritage Center gallery at the Ag Museum tells the story of agriculture as it changed with each evolving method of transporting goods to market.

There were many forms of horse or mule drawn vehicles. The Ag Museum exhibits ten different examples in the Heritage Center and many others on the grounds, including two horse drawn hearses. The collection in the gallery includes two two-seater buggies, one four-seater buggy, a mail wagon, a sulky carriage, a caralog, a Lindsay Log Wagon, and two farm wagons. Some were designed for transporting people and some for cargo.

Recently, the Local Resources and Field Studies class at Purvis High School took on the restoration of our Owensboro Farm Wagon. The class, instructed by Dr. Clyde Ginn 'Doc,' did extensive research on the wagon to determine the exact make and model of the wagon so that it could be restored to its original condition. What follows is their story.

The Owensboro Wagon Company's original plant was located on seven acres in Owensboro, Kentucky. It was complete with a lumber yard, a 12-fire blacksmith shop, a two-story woodworking department, and several large warehouses. At its peak in 1910, the company was producing 30,000 wagons and 10,000 buggies a year. It employed 350 men and 14 traveling salesmen for a line of products that included farm wagons, spring wagons, four-and eight-wheel log wagons, dump carts, drays, buggies, and surreys.

Its green Owensboro Wagon, known as the "Rolls-Royce of farm wagons," were sold in 22 states and in Cuba, Mexico, and South America. A top-of-the-line Owensboro wagon sold for $826 at the turn of the century. Workers at the Owensboro Wagon Company were among the best paid in Owensboro, earning $1.37 1/2 a day in the 1890's for a 60-hour week.

After identifying the make and model of the wagon, the class set about determining which parts were salvageable and which would need to be replaced or re-manufactured. The bed was completely deteriorated with only rotting wood and some rusty hardware left. The reach pole, front bolster, and hardware for the rear bolster had been removed by a previous owner. The front rear hounds were also rotten beyond repair, and many nuts and bolts were missing or rusted beyond use. The group made a materials list and sought out donors and needed parts.

Using some of the old parts as a pattern, they laid out and cut new ones where needed, and located carriage bolts with square nuts to repair the running gear. Using paint chips from the original colors on the rear axle and underneath some of the brackets, they created a match using an 1800's recipe found on the internet, which included ocher powder, turpentine, and a polymer lead substitute.

The class spent one day in Doc's blacksmith shop re-manufacturing the body brackets and box rod. They also replicated one of the side-board brackets and the rear bolster brace. They all took a turn at the forge and dug through some old parts to find a set of bolster irons to replace the missing ones on the wagon. Covered with coal dust and dirt, at the end of the day, Doc demonstrated how to harness and hook up a mule.

This was an interesting project for the class. This was more to them that just a repair job. It was a look into a way of life that no longer exists. One in which time went by slower and people were not rushed. One where neighbors depended on each other and hard work to get things done and life was simpler. With all the modern technology in the age of space exploration, it is hard to believe that less than 100 years ago wagons and horses were a part of everyday transportation. Today, tractors and trucks replace them in the hot dusty fields of Mississippi. Agriculture remains not only our heritage but our future.

Research and restoration was completed in the Fall of 2013. An article was compiled by Jennifer Loyd, Tim Johnson, Mark Mascaro, Katelyn Garrett, and Johnathan Campbell. Actual restoration work was done by all members of the class.

"We would like to thank the Mississippi Agriculture and Forestry Museum for allowing us to adopt this project. We would also like to thank our sponsors and donors for their time and talents as well as material contributions and the Lamar County School District for letting us have this class. Our donors are as follows: Adam Courtney, Agriculture Teacher Purvis High; Wayne Wilson, Wilson Trucking; Jerry Stuart, Stuart's Farm Supply; Clyde Ginn, Ph.D., owner of Mayhaw Mills Harness and Blacksmith Shop."

The fully restored wagon was returned to the Ag Museum on November 7 and is on display in the Heritage Center gallery.

The Ag Museum is located at 1150 Lakeland Drive in Jackson and is open Monday through Saturday from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. In addition to our gallery and exhibit spaces, the Ag Museum also has room for your event, whether it's a meeting, a wedding, or other special event. Preparing Your Livestock Farm For Winter

By www.southernstates.com

When the temperatures start to drop, the work on the farm does not slow down. Now is the time to prepare your farm and livestock for the cold, winter temperatures ahead. Being prepared and having a winter emergency plan will reduce the number of sick animals and save money. Planning for and providing the basic needs—food, water, and shelter, will help keep your animals healthy over the winter months.

Plan ahead for your livestock's winter water source. Ensuring an adequate and dependable supply of water will encourage optimal health and performance of livestock. You can't just rely on natural water sources because in really cold weather the water will freeze and it can take days before it thaws out. You will need to make sure that fresh water is available several times a day. If you have a tank heater or de-icer from last season, be sure to test it to ensure it's working properly. Follow the manufacturers' recommendations carefully to prevent fires and electric shocks. If you don't use a heater, there are still some things you can do to prevent your water source from freezing such as insulating the pipes and faucets.

If your livestock are accustomed to foraging throughout the warmer months, you will need to make plans for additional food sources in the winter. Animals need to eat more in cold weather to provide extra calories for heat energy. If weather is cold and windy, livestock need extra feed just to keep warm. You will need food to supplement thin or snowed under pastures. Plan ahead for emergency feeding procedures.

When the wind picks up and the temperatures fall, livestock will need shelter. Many animals like cattle, horses, and sheep are content to live outdoors all year, but will need shelter from the wind and winter storms. Before it gets too cold, set up shelter or windbreak areas for animals kept outside. Wind breaks come in different forms such as barns, open sheds, tree groves, and even stacks of hay.

Be sure to winterize the barn and any other shelter buildings on the farm. Check for and repair any roof leaks. Before winter sets in, make sure your heaters are working properly and are located in spots with good ventilation.

It is important throughout winter to check on all of your livestock daily. Their needs may change as the temperatures fluctuate. A well thought out winter plan for your farm will prepare you for unexpected emergencies and keep your livestock safe and sound through the winter months.

Prepare Plants Now For The Cold Weather

By Gary R. Bachman
MSU Horticulturist
Coastal Research & Extension Center

All gardeners know this is going to happen every year, and yet many are still surprised when it does. I'm talking about the arrival of freezing temperatures.

Despite the pleasant fall temperatures we are enjoying, there will come a time when we need to protect some of our landscape plants from freezing temperatures. And since no one reliably predicts the weather, now is a good time to get ready.

Many calls I receive are from gardeners who confuse frosts and freezes. While both are cold weather events, they are completely different.

Frosts relate to the amount of water in the air. When air temperatures drop low enough, the saturated water in the air condenses onto surfaces as dew. An example of this is a cold glass of iced tea sweating on a hot summer day.

Frosts typically occur when the sky is clear and the wind is calm. Heat absorbed by the soil and plants during the day is radiated into the air at night. Calm wind conditions allow surface temperatures to drop below freezing while higher elevations remain warmer.

If the surface temperature and dew point are below freezing, ice crystals form on the cool surfaces. Sometimes the air is too dry for ice crystals to form, but a frost event has still occurred. A frost can occur when the air temperature is above 32 degrees.

A freeze occurs when a mass of cold air moves into the area. This weather event often happens under windy conditions with a cloud cover. A typical freeze scenario is very different from a frost.

When the outside air temperature falls below 32 degrees for a certain number hours, a freeze can cause plant damage. A hard freeze occurs with temperatures below 28 degrees for a certain number of hours.

So what's a gardener to do to prepare for these events? Fortunately, we have lots of resources to keep us informed on the weather. TV, radio and weather websites can help us know when one is expected, but even then we can be fooled.

A couple of years ago, I followed the TV forecast that called for 36 degrees, and I didn't cover my lettuce plants. When I woke up the next morning, it was 26 degrees outside. It's a good thing most of our leafy green, cool-season vegetables can tolerate some fairly low temps.

So knowing the cold is coming, here are some tips to help your landscape and winter vegetables bundle up.

Make sure your plants are well watered going into a cold weather event. As water freezes, it releases heat that helps insulate the root system during cold snaps, especially in container-grown plants. Moisture in the potting mix acts as a buffer to falling temperatures, providing insulation and releasing heat as it cools.

Plants grown in containers have the advantage of being portable. When temperatures dip toward freezing and below, an easy solution is simply moving the plants into the house or garage for a couple of days. If moving the plants inside is not an option, simply place them up against the house for some protection. West- and south-facing walls are best, as they absorb and release more heat energy from the sun.

Maintain 2 to 3 inches of mulch around the base of landscape plants to conserve water and act as an insulation blanket for the roots.

Cover in-ground plants with plastic sheets, cloth, boxes or something similar. Ideally, the foliage should not touch the covering because frost and ice will form on these surfaces. Quick hoops are an ideal way to cover and protect vegetable crops from potential cold-weather damage. This approach worked very well in my garden last year. Whatever method you use, just be ready to put it into practice as we move in another Mississippi winter.

Provide easy winter protection with a small greenhouse structure made of plastic pipe and covered with plastic sheeting. (Photo by MSU Extension Service/Gary Bachman)

Fall Activities Bring Agritourists to Farms

By Linda Breazeale
MSU Office of Ag Communications

Corn mazes, pumpkin patches, and Christmas tree farms are becoming more popular tourist destinations across the country.

Becky Smith, assistant professor in agricultural economics with the Mississippi State University Extension Service, works with various agritourism businesses around the state. She said each endeavor takes significant planning and effort. She answers the "what's in it for me" question with one word: revenue.

"We are losing so many family farms every year, but this is a viable way to keep farms in the families," she said. "One great thing about agritourism ventures is that they are not all alike. Every farm is unique. If operators highlight what they know, it's not competition. It is more like cooperation."

Smith said the education component is not always explicit.

"It's a good thing any time farm operators can demonstrate agricultural activities, but most agritourism businesses focus primarily on entertainment," she said. "From an economic perspective, we used to know where our products came from, but in today's world, we don't understand how products get to the store. Being able to connect the dots of where food or fiber really comes from helps people understand how their economy works and the important contribution of agriculture."

Julie Ard-James of Hattiesburg was inspired to add an agritourism component to her family's dairy farm after visiting Mitchell Farms near Collins on her daughter's second birthday.

"The Mitchell family encouraged us to do something similar with our dairy in Lincoln County. We built a wagon, made fliers, and started booking school groups for students to see a working milking parlor

Holstein calves are among the tourist attractions at Ard's Dairy Farm in Lincoln County. Other agritourism opportunities on this working dairy farm include an operational milking parlor, a corn maze, a playground and a barrel train. (MSU Ag Communications File Photo/Kat Lawrence) and let them feed calves," she said. "We didn't know what the reception would be, but there was so much interest that we added a playground the next spring, then we added a fall corn maze."

Ard-James noted that most traditional dairy businesses have struggled in recent years.

"Our goal has been to supplement the farm to allow my dad to back off some other work projects. It has been a way for me to get back involved in the family farm, which my grandfather started," she said.

Ard-James said when she left home to pursue a college degree in marketing and hospitality management, she never dreamed she would return to the farm. After graduation, she worked for a company until after her third of four children was born.

"Ard's Dairy Farm allows us to be involved as a family," she said. "It is a lot of work, but I love it."

"This is a working dairy farm, so when people visit, they see activities going on that are related to day-to-day farming," Ard-James said. "Many of the kids may have never set foot on a farm, even if their parents grew up on one. We often encounter children who don't know that milk comes from a cow or eggs come from chickens."

Rebecca Bates, Lincoln County Extension agent, said the Ard family has made education a key component in their business. Much of their success is because visitors can learn and have fun.

"They have stayed true to their roots, and that's important to the success of these businesses," she said.

Bates described herself as one of the Ards' biggest cheerleaders.

"I love that children are able to get out in the country and see where their milk and food is produced. It is great for them to see reality," she said. "So many of these agritourism farms have something different to offer, and the Ards really play to their strength -- the dairy business."

The season for pumpkin patches and corn mazes now transitions into Christmas tree farms, bringing families back to their roots once again.

Cattle Theft Investigation in Madison and Yazoo Counties Leads To Arrests

By Jeff Stewart, Director
Mississippi Agricultural and
Livestock Theft Bureau - MDAC

On October 22, the Mississippi Agricultural and Livestock Theft Bureau (MALTB), the law enforcement division of the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce (MDAC), arrested five individuals for two counts of conspiracy to commit livestock theft, in conjunction with the Madison County Sheriff's Department. One suspect turned himself in to Yazoo County authorities, and all suspects will be charged in both Madison and Yazoo Counties.

During the course of the investigation, lead investigator Mike McGowan, of MALTB, and Russell Kirby, of the Madison County Sheriff's Department, discovered the suspects, Jimmy C. Davis, Bruce M.

Strong, Eddie B. Douglas, Lenard E. Bassett, and Justin D. Washington of Yazoo County and Charles E. Washington of Madison County, had stolen a total of 91 head of cattle spread over the two counties from one cattle producer. The theft occurred over a seven month period of time, and five of the suspects were employed by the producer. More arrests and further charges are expected to be made at a later date.

The Mississippi Agricultural and Livestock Theft Bureau enforces laws to prevent the theft of livestock, timber, and agricultural products and investigates all agricultural crimes. The Bureau also handles the registration of all livestock brands in the State. To report or provide information regarding an agricultural crime, call (800) 678-2660.

To help prevent cattle theft make sure all of your cattle have their tags and/or have been branded with the brand of your farm or ranch. Familiarize yourself with your cattle constantly so that you will be aware of any inconsistencies and check on cattle often so that you are aware of any changes among them. Be sure that your gates, locks, and fences are always fully up-to-date and are properly working.

Four Crops See Yield Records in Mississippi For 2013

By Bonnie Coblenz
MSU Ag Communications

Three Mississippi row crops are expected to post record yields for the 2013 growing season, and a fourth major crop may also break its previous record.

Corn is expected to average 180 bushels per acre; cotton, 1,090 pounds per acre; and rice, 7,500 pounds per acre. Hay has yielded an average of 3 tons per acre in 2013. Previous records for these crops were 165 bushels of corn per acre set in 2012; 1,024 pounds of cotton, 2004; 7,350 pounds of rice, 2007; and 2.9 tons of hay, 2005.

Soybeans are expected to post average yields of 43 bushels per acre, second highest to the record of 45 bushels set in 2012.

From 2011 to 2013, Mississippi farmers have set new yield records on essentially every crop produced in the state, said Greg Bohach, vice president of the Mississippi State University Division of Agriculture, Forestry and Veterinary Medicine.

"Mississippi crop farmers were blessed with another good season in 2013. The efforts by our research and Extension faculty and staff have been outstanding and have contributed to the excellent yields our farmers produced this year," Bohach said. "We applaud our farmers for the job they did in 2013, and at the same time, we applaud our faculty, staff, and students for their dedication and efforts."

John Michael Riley, Extension

agricultural economist, said Mississippi farmers know how to manage their fields, but good summer weather also played a significant role in these record yields.

"Despite starting off late because of less desirable, rainy spring weather, the temperatures were much milder this summer than what we typically see in Mississippi, and that helped," Riley said. "Rains came when we needed them, and although the Delta started to get dry in the middle of summer, it turned out not to be as big an issue as we thought."

Riley said Mississippi producers have gotten much better at growing corn, and with high demand and prices, they are making success with corn a much higher priority.

"We used to not put as much effort into growing corn, but now we have become much better at intensively managing corn for the highest yield," Riley said.

All growers benefit from new varieties and better use of technology, he said. Combined with ideal weather during the 2013 growing season, these benefits helped push cotton and hay yields to new heights.

Record yields are not expected to have a significant impact on planting intentions for 2014. Producers typically base planting decisions on crop prices, which largely are determined by supply and demand.
