Fun, Fanfare, and Floats - It's Dixie National Time

By Donna West, MDAC Staff

"I love a parade, the tramping of feet. I love every beat I hear of a drum. I love a parade, when I hear a band I just want to stand and cheer as they come." From the 1932 song I Love a Parade. It's been 80 years since the words to I Love a Parade were first penned, but they remain timeless even now...why? Because, people just love to celebrate other people, special achievements, and important occasions; and what better way is there to do that than with music, floats, and fanfare.

There are parades to commemorate a homecoming, as when the troops returned to America at the end of World War II. And, is it possible to get any further away from home than outerspace? So, why not celebrate our astronauts' safe and historic trip home from the moon with a parade. These parades were also ticker-tape parades, which most professional sports teams receive when they become world champions of their respective competitions. There are parades to observe holidays such as Christmas, Thanksgiving, or Easter. What about St. Patrick and his parade, not to mention inaugural parades, bowl game parades and THE parade of parades - Mardi Gras!

Then there's a cavalcade - a procession or parade on horseback; which by the way, Buffalo Bill Cody made famous in every town or city he took his Wild West show. He began each show with a carnival of performers from all over the world in their best attire or costumes, most on horseback, but many marching into the large arenas.

About this time every year here in Mississippi, we have our own massive cavalcade of sorts - it's called the Dixie National Livestock Show and Rodeo. Over the past 47 years this fun and festive 3-week extravaganza has become one of the largest celebrations of cowboys, cowgirls, livestock showmanship, top rodeo riders and country western music in the South. An eagerly anticipated accompaniment to Dixie National every year is the Dixie National Parade. This endearing and enduring parade of southwestern pageantry consists of hundreds of horses, wagons, motorcycles, hot rod and antique car clubs, beauty queens, fun floats, as well as individuals who just love a parade! Beginning at 9:00 a.m. sharp on Saturday, February 11, this year's theme... "Cowpoke Carnival" is a celebration of the importance of both winter carnival time and cowboy time here in the South.

Originally established to act as an educational tool for the cattle producers of the state, the Dixie National Livestock Show and Rodeo has experienced exceptional growth, and now ranks as one of the largest shows of its kind east of the Mississippi River. The Mississippi State Fairgrounds is the place to be as the Dixie National kicks off on January 28 and runs through February 19. A complete schedule of events can be found on pages 16-18.

Showcasing the 4-H and FFA livestock programs and livestock industry, the Dixie National is the site of the largest junior market livestock shows in Mississippi. For more than two decades, the Sale of Junior Champions has brought in millions of dollars to the livestock program.

Other events include the Dixie National Rodeo Dance, the Miss Dixie National Queen Pageant, the Equine Expo, the Farriers Competition, and the Dixie National Farm Expo. There are also a multitude of other livestock shows, expos, and competitions for participants. Renowned Chef, Luis Bruno will be hosting a beef cooking demonstration, with a steak grilling contest afterwards. If you are looking for something good to eat that is both hot and free, well then join us at the Mississippi Farmers Market on February 12 from 8:00 a.m. until 11:00 a.m. for the annual Dixie National Rodeo Breakfast - pancakes, sausage and all the fixings. On February 9 and 10, the Dixie National Wagon Train comes to town in all of its splendor; indeed, a dazzling sight to behold.

There will be no shortage of fun when the Rodeo kicks off in the Coliseum on February 9 and runs through February 15. Cowgirls and cowboys competing for the winning will keep you on the edge of your seat, while the rodeo clowns cut through the tension with their unique brand of amusement. Special entertainers are featured each day of the rodeo and include George Jones, Jerrod Niemann, Eli Young Band, Rodney Atkins, Chris Cagle, Lee Bice, and Jake Owen.

"With this being my first Dixie National as the Commissioner of Agriculture and Commerce, I am very excited to help showcase everything that encompasses this great event. From our talented youth involved in the livestock shows, to the hardworking cowboys in the rodeo, the Dixie National is second to none," said Commissioner Cindy Hyde-Smith. "With this year's great lineup of entertainment, talented rodeo riders, and the best of Smith, Harper, and Morgan rodeo stock, as well as our exceptional fairground complex, the 2012 Dixie National Livestock Show and Rodeo will continue the tradition of being the greatest show of its kind this side of the Mississippi River," added Billy Orr, Director of the Mississippi Fair Commission.

The Dixie National offers something for everyone and celebrates so much of what is important to us here in Mississippi - so come on down to the Fairgrounds and have a wonderful time. If you love a parade, well, don't miss the fun and fanfare of this year's Dixie National Cowpoke Carnival parade!

Livelihood, Environment at Stake in Farmers' Land

By Bonnie Coblenz
MSU Ag Communications

Many organizations and individuals are dedicated to protecting and restoring the environment, but some would be surprised to find that farmers are one group on the forefront of these efforts.

Erick Larson, grain crops agronomist with the Mississippi State University Extension Service, said farmers are some of the biggest conservationists around.

"Farmers are continually working to improve the quality of their land and resources so it will be sustainable and more productive, even during the inevitable times of poor farming conditions," Larson said. "Farmers depend on the land and water to earn a living this year, next year, and in the future, and they want their sons and daughters and grandchildren to be able to earn a living off that land as well."

In Mississippi, at least 98 percent of the state's 42,300 farms are owned and operated by families, not corporations. These family farms produce 86 percent of the state's agricultural products.

Social consciousness...

Larson said there are many misconceptions and much misinformation in the debate over whether farming, especially large-scale farming, is good or bad for the land.

"Farmers consider long-term consequences because they know the resources they are working with are not necessarily renewable," Larson said.

Hot topics in the farming debate are bioengineering and weed and insect resistance to chemical controls. While the science is complex, the bottom line for most consumers is simple.

"The general public is more interested in whether the food they eat is safe and whether new products and technologies, such as biotechnology and herbicides, are good for the food and fiber that we produce," Larson said.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Food and Drug Administration all help regulate and enforce various aspects of food safety, chemical use, and environmental monitoring.

Years of scientific testing and research back any new product or technology that becomes part of agriculture, Larson said. Tough regulations and food safety standards help ensure safe products for human consumers.

Friendly pest management...

One of the worst raps given farms is for their use of chemicals. Improper use of chemicals can lead to the development of weeds and insects that are resistant to the chemicals that once seemed like magic cures for these costly challenges.

Chemicals are labeled with safe protocol and application information, which are based on all available data.

Angus Catchot, MSU Extension entomologist, said scientific advances in insect control now allow farmers to control harmful insects without hurting beneficial insects. Current insecticides often target individual pests and are applied with precision and careful timing.

"Insecticide treatments are expensive, and farmers do not want to spray insecticides unless they have to," Catchot said.

If the environment is not healthy, producing crops is a serious challenge. Farmers are among the most active environmentalists as they make a living while protecting the state's natural resources. (Photo by Kat Lawrence).

Scientific advances over the last few decades have introduced crops genetically engineered to resist specific, harmful pests. These crops require significantly fewer insecticide applications, which ultimately is much more environmentally friendly.

Tobacco budworms provide an example of how crops with this resistance, known as Bt or transgenic crops, reduced the need for chemicals to be sprayed on farmland.

"In 1995, cotton producers experienced an outbreak of tobacco budworms and in Mississippi averaged six insecticide applications to control this pest. Some places had to have more than 10 applications," Catchot said. "Bt cotton controls 100 percent of tobacco budworm populations, and producers no longer treat for this pest."

Savvy producers today control insects using sophisticated Integrated Pest Management, or IPM, techniques. Many of these techniques are the result of Mississippi Agricultural and Forestry Experiment Station research and MSU Extension Service programs that have netted better results, lower costs, and fewer chemicals in the battle against bugs.

"IPM uses every tool available, which includes cultural practices, beneficial insects, scouting, and insecticides when necessary, with the goal of having the least impact on the environment," Catchot said. "It's a multi-tactic approach that is least disruptive to anything in the environment other than the insects being controlled."

IPM incorporates all aspects of managing pests, including how the crop is grown.

"Farmers today spend more than $100 an acre in the Delta controlling tarnished plant bugs in cotton," Catchot said. "MSU researchers are looking at managing plant bugs by manipulating planting dates. We're trying to show that by planting early, we can avoid up to 50 percent of the insecticides typically used to control these pests."

Another pest under scrutiny is soybean loopers, the crop's No. 2 pest in 2011. Soybean loopers are migratory insects that fly up from southern latitudes. Researchers have found that planting early can almost completely eliminate the need to treat for this pest.

"Farmers do have to rely on insecticides, but they're doing so in a very calculated way to minimize the impact on the environment," Catchot said.

Both insecticides and herbicides used to control weeds are applied with discretion on an as-needed basis when a pest is threatening to reduce the quality or yield of a crop.

Recreational uses...

While cost is part of producers' desire to use as few chemicals as possible, they are by no means the only consideration.

Many farms today make money on more than the sale of crops. Tracts of farmland, waterways, and forests adjoining farmland are leased for hunting, fishing, and other recreational opportunities. These ventures bring in important revenue and give farmers who are also avid hunters or fishermen an opportunity to enjoy this use of their land.

"They're not going to use practices on their farm that jeopardize a source of income and a recreational opportunity they enjoy for themselves and their family," Catchot said.

Certification required...

Farmers follow careful environmental practices for financial reasons, their own ethics, and personal commitment to preserving the land. Numerous regulations are in place to ensure protection of the land, the food supply, people and animals.

Tommy McDaniel, a division director with the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce's Bureau of Plant Industry, said all producers applying restricted-use pesticides must be certified to do so.

"In the registration process, pesticides are evaluated to ensure that they will not have unreasonable adverse effects on humans or the environment," McDaniel said. "Pesticides may pose some risk to humans, animals, or the environment, but they can be used safely and effectively as long as they are used according to the label directions."

Pesticide applicator certification is a legal requirement for those applying restricted-use pesticides and/or general-use products in a commercial situation. Licensing is required by both state and federal regulations, and the responsibility for providing this training has been given to the MSU Extension Service.

"The pesticide label contains pertinent information that should be understood and followed when using a pesticide," McDaniel said.

Big picture...

Mississippi farmers do all they can to make a living and sustain the environment, and the result is good for consumers and the economy.

Ken Hood, an MSU Extension agricultural economist, said large commercial farms are key to the United States' ability to feed the world.

"The first step to becoming an industrialized nation with a vibrant economy is to be able to provide the basic needs for your own population," Hood said. "Agriculture provides food and clothing. Once you meet these needs, you can release labor to other sectors of the economy and increase economic development."

Third World countries do not have the ability to supply their population's basic needs, and they rely on these being supplied by U.S. farmers and those of other industrialized nations.

"We provide what we need plus a lot more," Hood said. "Big producers are providing for the needs of ourselves and other countries, and that allows us to release productive units to do other things."

Prescribed Burning In Managing Your Southern Pine Forest

By Mississippi Forestry Commission

Fire is part of a healthy Southern pine forest. Prescribed burning is the deliberate use of fire under specified and controlled conditions to accomplish one or more of several objectives of forestland management. It is a practice that provides the forest manager with an effective and economical means of performing many necessary management tasks.

Does Prescribed Fires Damage Timber?

All fires in a natural environment do some damage. Prescribed burns are no exception. However, properly planned and executed, prescribed burning can accomplish many objectives at reasonable cost and with minimum damage to the forest.

Is a Permit Required?

Air pollution control regulations must be observed during all burning. A burning permit is required. Prescribed burning permits, guidelines, advice, and assistance with actual burning are available through the nearest Mississippi Forestry Commission (MFC) Area and District offices. The MFC requires a permit be obtained prior to burning. Contact your county MFC office for permit information. If unfavorable conditions exist, the burn permit will not be granted. Additionally, burn applicators should be certified by the MFC. You also can be certified by completing the prescribed burning short course conducted by Mississippi State University's Continuing Education program.

Uses For Prescribed Burning Fuel Reduction

Fuels - grass, weeds, pine needles, hardwood leaves - accumulate in pine stands of all ages. This accumulation of fuel threatens destruction by wildfire in young stands and hinders regeneration in older ones. Regular, periodic removal by prescribed burning eliminates this problem in an effective and inexpensive way.

Hardwood Control

In areas better suited to growing pine, hardwoods creep in early and, if not treated, grow increasingly bothersome. They arrive and persist because many species can grow under shade. Hardwoods compete with pines for moisture and nutrients, impede visibility and access through the stands, and interfere with natural regeneration. A well-planned burning program is the most economical way to keep this problem under control.

Site Preparation

In both natural and artificial regeneration, full overhead light and freedom from hardwood competition are necessary for establishment and growth. For natural seeding, a program of burning to reduce small diameter hardwood and expose mineral soil before harvest cutting is needed. To prepare sites for direct seeding or planting of seedlings, more vigorous measures may be necessary. Hardwood must be destroyed and mineral soil exposed. Timely burning plays a part in this process.

Wildlife Habitat Improvement

Many of the burns prescribed for other purposes will benefit wildlife as well. For example, hardwood control burns in immature stands encourages fresh, low sprout growth which is within the reach of browsing deer. Quail and turkey benefit from fuel reduction burns that remove heavy brush and encourage growth of annual plants. But if good games habitat is the primary objective in management, more intensive measures will be required, and careful attention will have to be given to size and time of year of the burn.

Disease Control

Brown-spot needle blight usually infects the foliage of longleaf pine seedlings in the "grass" stage. It can delay growth and kill seedlings. When more than one-third of the needles are dead of disease, prescribed burning in the winter will scorch the needles and kill the fungus without harming the seedlings. Subsequent new needle formation increases seedling vigor and helps initiate early height growth. A root rot often attacks and kills stems in recently thinned young loblolly and splash pine plantations, particularly on old field soils poor in organic matter. Burning the litter tends to encourage biological activity that slows the spread of the fungus. Burns made for fuel reduction, done before thinning, may help control the disease.

Harvest Cutting Area Improvement

Reduction of low growing brush before harvest cutting increases visibility and makes timber marking and cutting much easier. This in turn lowers sale preparation and logging costs, often substantially.

Steps To Conducting a Prescribed Burn

- Obtain burn applicator certification.
- Map and develop a plan for the area to be burned. Have the plan notarized at least ten days prior to the burning date.
- Arrange for equipment and personnel.
- Construct firelanes around the tract within one month of the burn.
- Determine wind speed and direction, humidity, temperature, and firing technique.
- Notify neighbors of your plan.
- Recheck firelanes and recondition them if necessary.
- On the burn day, obtain a permit from the MFC.
- Conduct the burn.
- After the burn, check all boundaries for "breakovers" (escaped fire).

Time of Year

It is important to plan a prescribed burn during the winter burning season. Cool air temperatures and more predictable winds create more favorable fuel moisture conditions for a low intensity fire that should cause little damage to pine trees. Prescribed burns conducted later or after earlier burns can be scheduled at other seasons to produce higher intensity burns to meet different objectives. For example, the best time to burn to control understory brush and vegetation is in late spring or early summer. Small understory hardwood species are more easily killed by a prescribed burn at this time.

Fire can be beneficial or damaging to pine forests. Prescribed burning is a very useful tool in pine management, but only when applied carefully and by skilled professionals. Seek the advice of local foresters if you are considering prescribed burning. Professional foresters can help you plan a safe burn - both for you and your pine forests.
