Warm Winter Has Bees Buzzing Early This Year

By Keri Collins Lewis
MSU Ag Communications

Warm weather in January and early February is causing honey bees to be active before they have enough food to eat, and the state's beekeepers need to monitor colonies for starvation, a Mississippi State University expert said.

"Contrary to what many people think, bees do not hibernate in winter," said Audrey Sheridan, research associate in MSU's Department of Biochemistry, Molecular Biology, Entomology, and Plant Pathology. "They remain in the hive, clustered together, until the outside temperatures are above 54 degrees Fahrenheit. They are not reproducing during this time, but they are consuming energy to maintain a constant temperature in their cluster. The honey and pollen they saved from the summer keeps them alive through the winter."

Warm weather stimulates some plants to bloom and generate pollen, which in turn stimulates the queen to start laying eggs earlier than she normally would, Sheridan said. If there is a freeze, those plants could be killed, and that food source would not be available to the developing bees.

"With an increase in the demand for food, the bees are flying more to forage, and since there is little nectar available, they're rapidly consuming honey," she said. "They could easily run out of honey before the spring nectar flow begins."

Harry Fulton, former state entomologist with the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce and secretary-treasurer for the Mississippi Beekeepers Association, said henbit and yellow buttercup are in bloom, and maple, elm, and cedar trees are blooming early.

Normally the colonies in central and north Mississippi do not gather enough nectar to sustain themselves until mid-March, he said.

"In other words, they are consuming more than they are gathering until that point," he said. "Combined warm weather and pollen supply is causing bee colonies to be three to four weeks ahead of schedule in spring build-up," Fulton said. "The disadvantage is that unless beekeepers really stay on top of things and keep track of food stores, colonies could quickly starve to death with all the young bees hatching to be fed, along with all the brood being raised."

Brood refers to the egg, larva, and

Honey bees forage on flowers, such as crimson clover, about a month earlier than usual due to warm winter temperatures.

pupa stages of the bee's lifecycle, before it emerges from the cell as a young bee. Typically, cold weather prevents the queen from laying a lot of eggs because they cannot be kept warm enough to survive when the colony clusters for warmth. The uncovered areas of brood will die.

"Any sudden cold spell like we had in mid-February could set them back, but since it only lasted two days, the colonies weren't harmed beyond some brood loss," he said.

The first sign of starvation is bees dragging out partially eaten brood, he said.

"Inspect the hive and any time a colony has two frames or less of stored honey, it should be fed," he said.

Beekeepers should limit feeding to candy boards or sugar syrup in inboard feeders or hive-top feeders directly above the cluster, Fulton said. Avoid using an entrance feeder unless it is warm enough for bees to be flying. In an emergency, beekeepers should sprinkle dry sugar on top of the frames.

If warm temperatures continue, the spring flow may be earlier, as some nectar-producing plants, especially various types of clover, could bloom ahead of schedule.

This unusual activity may lead some beekeepers to consider splitting their hives early, but they should note that queens or commercially produced queen cells may not be available.

Sheridan, who works for the Extension Service and the Mississippi Agricultural and Forestry Experiment Station, said beekeepers have valid concerns about the weather's impact on the usual schedule of colony development and the availability of package bees and queens.

"Considering that most queen producers have scheduled their activities months in advance, beekeepers may not be able to get the queens they need this early," she said.

If hives are strong early, beekeepers should routinely check for swarm cell production and manage their colonies regardless of the weather.

"If crowded, bees could still swarm on days when the weather is suitable for flight," Fulton said.

Proper management is the key to successful beekeeping, Fulton said.

"With such a warm January and February, it looks like beekeepers in central and north Mississippi are in for a great year if they can keep their colonies fed and healthy until April," he said. "As for southern Mississippi, the bees should already be making and storing lots of honey from spring titi, a tree with white flowers that normally blooms in February. Their season normally runs about a month ahead of the northern part of the state."

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration reported the state's average temperature for January was 50.7 degrees, the 15th warmest January on record.

Enjoy Domestic Honey For Extra Sweet Taste

By Mississippi State University
Extension Service

Old wives tales make great claims about honey's health benefits, but one undisputable aspect of Mother Nature's product is its pure-tasting sweetness.

Honey is useful to have handy when cooking, and it can often substitute for much of the sugar in recipes. Honey is up to twice as sweet as sugar. It gives food a golden quality, and many people's tastebuds can't get enough of it. Honey is a natural substance, and depending on its source, varies in color from a light transparent gold to a darker, stronger-tasting honey."

Here are some tips for cooking with honey: Decrease the temperature by 25 degrees to prevent over-browning. When you're baking, add one-fourth teaspoon baking soda for every cup of honey used. For each cup of honey, reduce the total of other liquids by one-fourth cup and eliminate 1 1/4 cups sugar. Honey may help baked goods retain moisture and stay fresher longer, and it makes a wonderful glaze for ham, chicken, or turkey.

Honey is a natural and safe food for adults and older children, but it absolutely should not be given to babies. Honey contains pollen and spores from the nectar bees collect to make honey. Infant immune systems are not advanced enough to fight off possible botulism spores that honey may contain. The risk is only a concern in babies less than one-year-old.

Honey has a distinct taste.

Many people who suffer with allergies testify that honey helps relieve their symptoms, although there is no scientific evidence to support that honey has any medicinal value. Many home remedies call for honey as an ingredient.

Mississippi beekeepers produce a unique specialty product that is often hard for consumers to find locally produced.

Harry Fulton, former state entomologist with the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce and secretary-treasurer for the Mississippi Beekeepers Association, said there are about 50 beekeepers in the state who depend on beekeeping for a significant portion of their family income. Mississippi produces about 1.5 to 1.6 million pounds of honey each year. Nationally, the United States produces about 220 million pounds. (The economic threat caused by imported honey has decreased; however, large volumes of honey are imported).

Fulton said the economic problems facing honey producers have been discouraging in the past, but things are looking much better. Mississippi beekeepers and other U.S. honey producers want consumers to know that their honey is better than imported honey because it is more likely to taste better and less likely to be contaminated with unwanted adulterants.

Domestic honey prices are the highest ever for producers; wholesale prices for Mississippi range roughly from $1.40 to $1.75 per lb., which is approximately $17 to $19 per gallon.

Fulton advised consumers to check labels on honey at local grocery stores to see if it is imported or domestic. He said the labels also should indicate whether or not it is pure. Store honey in a tightly-sealed jar at room temperature to avoid crystallization. Do not store honey in the refrigerator! Refrigeration speeds up crystallization. If honey crystallizes, remove the lid and place the jar in warm water and let it sit and warm gently for 10-15 minutes, stirring every few minutes.

Livestock Brand Renewal

The State Brand Registrar has announced that in July of 2012 the new five year Livestock Brand Book for the state of Mississippi will be published. This is done on a five year cycle. All livestock brands which are registered with the state must be re-registered by July in order to be in the brand book and to be a valid brand.

Renewal notices were mailed on March 1st; anyone who has a registered brand and has not received a notice should call the State Registrar, Linda Gabbert, at 1-800-678-2660 or 601-359-1121. Anyone interested in obtaining a new livestock brand should also call the same number.

Mississippi Code 69-29-105 outlines the process for registering or transferring a livestock brand and the penalty for branding livestock with a brand which has not been registered. The registration fee for a five year period is $5.00.

Advertising Guidelines

The Mississippi Market Bulletin is published on the 1st and 15th of each month by the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce. The Mississippi Market Bulletin is an important way for the Department to disseminate news and information about issues affecting Mississippi's agriculture industry and the Department's operations.

Through its classified advertising section, the Bulletin provides a forum for Mississippi residents to buy and sell agricultural related items while also giving statewide exposure to small farmers who might not normally have the economic resources for such widespread advertising. The Bulletin does not publish commercial or display ads and all items offered for sale must have been produced, raised, grown or operated on the seller's property. Businesses, corporations, dealerships, brokers or other commercial enterprises are not allowed to advertise in the Mississippi Market Bulletin.

Advertising rules and guidelines have been established for the Mississippi Market Bulletin in order to comply with regulations enforced by the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce and to maintain the objectives of the publication. The staff of the Mississippi Market Bulletin reserves the right to edit, revise or reject any advertisement.

The Mississippi Market Bulletin assumes no responsibility for any notice appearing in the Bulletin nor for any transaction resulting from published notices. Advertisers are cautioned that it is against the law to misrepresent any product offered for sale in public notices or advertisements carried in any publication that is delivered by the United States Postal Service.

- In order to advertise in the Mississippi Market Bulletin you must be a subscriber. To place an ad, you must include your name, mailing address and account number that the subscription is listed under on each ad that you submit (this information will not be printed). Each subscriber is allowed to advertise two ads in the Bulletin, listing one ad per category.
- All listings must be agriculture related (raised, grown, produced or operated on your farm). At the top of your ad, write the category that the ad should be listed under. We reserve the right to edit, revise or reject each ad. Please print or type your ad.
- There is a 30-word limit for classified advertisements, this includes: price (on the item you are selling), your city, county and telephone number or name and complete address must be included in the ad if you do not list a telephone number. Ads cannot be held over from one issue to another. You must submit them for each issue.
- Out-of-state residents are not eligible to advertise with the following exceptions: Out-of-state ads are allowed in the "Wanting To Buy" category. Out-of-state ads are allowed for individuals owning farm property within the state that is being offered for sale (consisting of 10 acres or more).

MAY 1 ISSUE.....DEADLINE MON., APR. 16, 2012 • 12:00 NOON

Many Mississippians wonder whether the mild winter will increase the insect pest populations in their gardens and fields this year. However, spring weather could be the more significant factor, said Mississippi State University experts.

MSU Extension Service entomologist Angus Catchot said he is asked about the impact of the winter weather on insect populations everywhere he goes.

"Generally, you can make some assumptions on how cold or mild winters will impact insect pest numbers, but usually it is more about the spring than the winter," he said. "For example, you can have a really harsh winter that kills most of an overwintering population of insects, but a very favorable spring, where conditions are perfect for wild host plants. Then insect numbers can rebound very rapidly."

"On the other hand, you can have a very mild winter and many more insect pests than usual can survive the winter, followed by a spring with limited host plants. Then numbers can actually be reduced going into summer," he said.

Catchot said winter survival of parasites or parasitoids that feed on certain insect pests may keep insect populations in check.

"This winter has certainly been a mild one so far, and the early spring is shaping up to have adequate rainfall for abundant wild host plants," he said. "Most folks guess we'll see a resurgence in some insect pests that we haven't seen in high numbers for a couple of years."

Insects survive seasonal temperature changes in a variety of ways, and growers need to increase their awareness of native and invasive insect populations as winter gives way to spring.

Blake Layton, an entomologist and Extension professor at MSU's Department of Biochemistry, Molecular Biology, Entomology and Plant Pathology, said the state's native pests are well-adapted to the variable winter temperatures. In contrast, invasive insects use warmer temperatures to establish themselves in the state as they move from subtropical climates.

"Once these insects get a toehold in the Gulf Coast, they can move farther north. The Argentine ant has been seen in north Mississippi," he said. "They can displace fire ants, and they don't sting. If they stay outside, they are beneficial. The problem is they like to come inside."

Layton had a colony of Argentine ants in his yard, but they disappeared during last year's cold winter. He did not get any calls about them from clients, either.

"A winter like this, though, can allow them to survive. Tropical and subtropical adapted insects will be affected most when we have a warm winter," he said. "Two years ago, the big concern in row crops was the redbanded stink bug, which had moved from Louisiana into the Delta. The cold winter of 2010 resulted in the disappearance of the redbanded stink bug from Mississippi, since stink bugs are greatly impacted by temperatures."

"Last year was a light year for stink bugs in all crops, but this year's warm temperatures will improve the survival of stink bugs over the winter," Layton said.

Stink bugs afflict soybeans, cotton, and vegetable crops, such as tomatoes and peas. Early generations are not very abundant, but they have several generations per year.

"When you spray for stink bugs, you may impact beneficial insects that help control caterpillars, so then you have to spray for caterpillars. Everything is interrelated," he said.

The program and trade show open at 9 a.m. with educational seminars, a trade show featuring agricultural equipment for beef and poultry producers, pharmaceuticals for cattle, and other valuable information.

Door prizes will be given in each educational session.

Educational sessions include: Projection on Beef Prices and Economic Outlook by Dr. John Michael Riley, MSU; Contagious Poultry Diseases and the State's Response by Dr. Jim Watson, State Veterinarian; Cooking with Beef/Demo by Nancy Strickland, Mississippi CattleWomen's Association; Respiratory Problems with Cattle Vaccines New and Old by Dr. Robin Faulkner.

The free event is open to the public and sponsored by the Mississippi State University Extension Service and Community Bank. For more information, contact local Extension Service offices in Jasper, Newton, Rankin, Scott, Simpson, or Smith Counties.
