Economics, Beetles Trigger Timber Sales

By Linda Breazeale
MSU Ag Communications

Landowners debating the timing for their next timber sale should send trees to the market sooner, rather than later.

James Henderson, assistant forestry professor with Mississippi State University's Extension Service, said increases in housing starts are contributing to gradual timber price improvements, but better reasons to harvest could be related to insects and taxes.

"Southern pine beetle activity in southwest Mississippi introduces an element of risk to landowners. Thinning on time is always the recommendation, but the recent threats from these beetles make it even more important," he said.

Landowners often hesitate to thin stands because they do not like pulpwood prices, but Henderson describes that issue as "small potatoes" in the big picture.

"When you delay thinning over a couple dollars a ton, you delay the final harvest of the sawtimber product, which is where the big payoff is. Delaying reduces the value of your investment, and you risk losing the entire investment because of the threat from Southern pine beetles," he said.

Another factor to encourage landowners to sell trees this year is the approaching end of the 15 percent long-term capital gains tax rate, which could increase to 20 percent if Congress does not extend the lower rate through 2013.

The recent market price increase reflects an improvement in the home construction sector.

"New home construction has increased 25 percent, and permits are up by 28.5 percent during the past year," he said. "These increases are the best news we have had since 2006 when the housing market started its collapse."

Henderson said pine sawtimber and chip-n-saw prices have increased modestly since the summer of 2011. Dry conditions open up a lot of timberland and that has kept the market from going up more.

Andy Londo, an Extension and research professor in MSU's Forest and Wildlife Research Center, said the long-overdue Southern pine beetles are causing damage in the Homochitto National Forest in southwest Mississippi.

"Mississippi loses trees every year to Ips beetles, but we've had very little activity from Southern pine beetles in recent years," he said. "Southern pine beetles have the potential to be much more damaging than Ips because of how their damage spreads. Ips may impact a spot of 20 trees or so and stop, but Southern pine beetle damage expands to encompass thousands of acres."

Trees that are stressed from conditions such as drought or lightning damage are at a greater risk of beetle attack.

Londo said control of Southern pine beetles begins with identifying the infestation's origin and determining the direction the beetles are moving.

"We recommend removing a buffer of trees -- as wide as trees are tall -- around the advancing head of the spot to stop its spread. It is better to cut too much than try to salvage later. Ips infestations typically do not require removal to stop spreads," he said.

Londo encouraged landowners to thin stands that are ready to thin, especially in the southwest portion of the state.

"Thinning is the best way to avoid beetle damage because it helps keep trees healthier," he said.

Southern Pine Beetle Threat

Prevention program helps landowners...

A Southern pine beetle prevention program is available to forest landowners to encourage the thinning of timber stands to promote healthier, more insect-resistant trees.

Andy Londo, an Extension and research professor in Mississippi State University's Forest and Wildlife Research Center, said the first Southern pine beetle activity in the state in recent years should motivate landowners to take advantage of an ongoing cost-share program. The program provides a $75 per acre cost share, or about $3 per ton, in addition to stumpage for landowners to thin their pine trees.

"Proactive management activities, such as periodic thinning, can increase overall forest health and reduce the threat of a Southern pine beetle outbreak," he said.

In 2008, the Mississippi Forestry Commission, in conjunction with the U.S. Forest Service and the MSU Extension Service, started a cost-share program to encourage private forest landowners to thin dense pine stands to prevent future Southern pine beetle infestations. Cost shares for commercial and pre-commercial thinning are available for sites south of Interstate 20.

Londo said thinning tree stands to desired levels is the best prevention tool. There are no effective chemical treatments to prevent a pine bark beetle infestation in a forestland setting and no reasonable chemical extermination methods.

Details of the program, including deadlines and payment schedules, are available in the document, "Reducing the Threat of Southern Pine Beetle Infestations: A Guide to Cost Share Pine Thinning Operations in Mississippi." Get this information by contacting the local county Extension director, by calling the MSU Extension forestry office at (662) 325-3905, or by emailing ajlondo@cf.msstate.edu. Regional Extension forestry contacts include James Floyd in southwest Mississippi at (601) 857-2284 or jfloyd@ext.msstate.edu, and Butch Bailey in southeast Mississippi at (601) 794-0671 or butchb@ext.msstate.edu.

The Extension publication, "Identifying and Controlling the Southern Pine Bark Beetle" is available at <http://msucare.com/pubs>.

Agriculture Secretary Vilsack Announces New Obama Administration Efforts to Assist Farmers and Ranchers Impacted by Drought

By Jennifer Yezak
Director, Office of External and Intergovernmental Affairs
U.S. Department of Agriculture

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack announced new flexibility and assistance in the U.S. Department of Agriculture's (USDA) major conservation programs to get much-needed help to livestock producers as the most wide-spread drought in seven decades intensifies in the United States. Vilsack also announced plans to encourage crop insurance companies to provide a short grace period for farmers on unpaid insurance premiums, as some farming families can be expected to struggle to make ends meet at the close of the crop year.

"President Obama and I are committed to getting help to producers as soon as possible and sustaining the success of America's rural communities through these difficult times," said Vilsack. "Beginning today, USDA will open opportunities for haying and grazing on lands enrolled in conservation programs while providing additional financial and technical assistance to help landowners through this drought. And we will deliver greater peace of mind to farmers dealing with this worsening drought by encouraging crop insurance companies to work with farmers through this challenging period. As severe weather and natural disasters continue to threaten the livelihoods of thousands of our farming families, we want you and your communities to know that USDA stands with you."

The assistance announced uses the Secretary of Agriculture's existing authority to help create and encourage flexibility within four USDA programs: the Conservation Reserve Program (CRP), the Environmental Quality Incentives Program (EQIP), the Wetlands Reserve Program (WRP), and the Federal Crop Insurance Program.

Conservation Reserve Program (CRP)

To assist farmers and ranchers affected by drought, Vilsack is using his discretionary authority to allow additional acres under CRP to be used for haying or grazing under emergency conditions. CRP is a voluntary program that provides producers annual rental payments on their land in exchange for planting resource conserving crops on cropland to help prevent erosion, provide wildlife habitat, and improve the environment. CRP acres can already be used for emergency haying and grazing during natural disasters to provide much needed feed to livestock. Given the widespread nature of this drought, forage for livestock is already substantially reduced. The action today will allow lands that are not yet classified as "under severe drought" but that are "abnormally dry" to be used for haying and grazing. This will increase available forage for livestock. Haying and grazing will only be allowed following the local primary nesting season, which has already passed in most areas. Especially sensitive lands such as wetlands, stream buffers, and rare habitats will not be eligible.

Environmental Quality Incentives Program (EQIP)

To assist farmers and ranchers affected by drought, Vilsack is using his discretionary authority to provide assistance to farmers and ranchers by allowing them to modify

Crops wither, topsoil lies cracked and parched, while reservoirs shrink, leaving beds exposed to the sun. More than half of the continental United States is in some stage of drought, while most of the rest of the nation endures abnormally dry conditions.

current EQIP contracts to allow for prescribed grazing, livestock watering facilities, water conservation, and other conservation activities to address drought conditions. EQIP is a voluntary program that provides financial and technical assistance to agricultural producers on their land to address natural resource concerns on agricultural and forest land. The USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) will work closely with producers to modify existing EQIP contracts to ensure successful implementation of planned conservation practices. Where conservation activities have failed because of drought, NRCS will look for opportunities to work with farmers and ranchers to re-apply those activities. In the short term, funding will be targeted towards hardest hit drought areas.

Wetlands Reserve Program (WRP)

To assist farmers and ranchers affected by drought, Vilsack is using his discretionary authority to authorize haying and grazing of WRP easement areas in drought-affected areas where such haying and grazing is consistent with conservation of wildlife habitat and wetlands. WRP is a voluntary conservation easement program that provides technical and financial assistance to agricultural producers to restore and protect valuable wetland resources on their property. For producers with land currently enrolled in WRP, NRCS has expedited its Compatible Use Authorization (CUA) process to allow for haying and grazing. The compatible use authorization process offers NRCS and affected producers with the management flexibility to address short-term resource conditions in a manner that promotes both the health of the land and the viability of the overall farming operation.

Federal Crop Insurance Program

To help producers who may have cash flow problems due to natural disasters, USDA will encourage crop insurance companies to voluntarily forego charging interest on unpaid crop insurance premiums for an extra 30 days, to November 1, 2012, for spring crops. Policy holders who are unable to pay their premiums in a timely manner accrue an interest penalty of 1.25 percent per month until payment is made. In an attempt to help producers through this difficult time, Vilsack sent a letter to crop insurance companies asking them to voluntarily defer the accrual of any interest on unpaid spring crop premiums by producers until November. In turn, to assist the crop insurance companies, USDA will not require crop insurance companies to pay uncollected producer premiums until one month later.

Thus far in 2012, USDA has designated 1,297 counties across 29 states as disaster areas, making all qualified farm operators in the areas eligible for low-interest emergency loans. Increasingly hot and dry conditions from California to Delaware have damaged or slowed the maturation of crops such as corn and soybeans, as well as pasture- and range-land. Vilsack has instructed USDA subcabinet leaders to travel to affected areas to augment ongoing assistance from state-level USDA staff and provide guidance on the department's existing disaster resources. To deliver assistance to those who need it most, the Secretary recently reduced the interest rate for emergency loans from 3.75 percent to 2.25 percent, while lowering the reduction in the annual rental payment to producers on CRP acres used for emergency haying or grazing from 25 percent to 10 percent. Vilsack has also simplified the Secretarial disaster designation process and reduced the time it takes to designate counties affected by disasters by 40 percent.

USDA agencies have been working for weeks with state and local officials, as well as individuals, businesses, farmers, and ranchers, as they begin the process of helping to get people back on their feet. USDA offers a variety of resources for states and individuals affected by the recent disasters. For additional information and updates about USDA's efforts, please visit www.usda.gov/drought.

The Obama Administration, with Agriculture Secretary Vilsack's leadership, has worked tirelessly to strengthen rural America, maintain a strong farm safety net, and create opportunities for America's farmers and ranchers. U.S. agriculture is currently experiencing one of its most productive periods in American history thanks to the productivity, resiliency, and resourcefulness of our producers. A strong farm safety net is important to sustain the success of American agriculture. USDA's crop insurance program currently insures 264 million acres, 1.14 million policies, and $110 billion worth of liability on about 500,000 farms. In response to tighter financial markets, USDA has expanded the availability of farm credit, helping struggling farmers refinance loans. In the past 3 years, USDA provided 103,000 loans to family farmers totaling $14.6 billion. Over 50 percent of the loans went to beginning and socially disadvantaged farmers and ranchers.

2012 Drought Will Shrink Livestock's Profit Margins

By Linda Breazeale
MSU Ag Communications

Pictures of wilting corn in the Midwest may dominate the evening news, but the 2012 drought is also shrinking livestock's profit potential nationwide.

John Michael Riley, agricultural economist with Mississippi State University's Extension Service, said the drought means livestock, dairy, and aquaculture producers will continue to see higher feed prices.

"Cattle will be the most impacted, both directly -- by a grass shortage -- and indirectly -- by higher feed supplement costs," he said. "Because of this drought, any species that rely on forages and grains will cost more to feed and maintain, and in the end, consumers will likely feel the tug in their household budgets."

Riley said last year's drought was more localized, impacting only a handful of states in the southern Plains. While Texas conditions are not as severe as in 2011, it remains in a drought zone. Currently, about 80 percent of the United States is in some stage of drought.

"The downsizing of the national cattle herd started last year during the Texas drought, and that is continuing this year as producers cope with deteriorating pastures and higher feed costs," Riley said. "Once this push of cattle to market clears, cattle supplies nationwide will tighten even further as we move into 2013. The result could be higher cattle prices if demand holds up."

Riley said Mississippi producers should benefit from the higher crop prices and pasture conditions because their land received some July rains, but there are no economic guarantees.

"Pork, catfish, and poultry farmers also will feel the effects of the drought with higher costs of production, especially from corn and soybean prices," he said. "Producers will either have to move their prices up, cut back on production, or more likely, sell out completely -- go out of business -- thus lowering supply down the road."

July rains have helped Mississippi forages rebound from the June drought, but now producers need to watch for invasions of army worms, like this one working on new growth in an Oktibbeha County pasture on July 20, 2012. (Photo by MSU Plant and Soil Sciences/Rocky Lemus)

Riley said Mississippi should have a better corn and hay crop than other areas, but some early damage could limit the potential of both crops.

"Growers with decent yields will benefit from the higher prices," he said. "There are isolated cases where fields suffered significant yield losses from the June drought."

Rocky Lemus, an Extension forage specialist in MSU's Department of Plant and Soil Sciences, said 60 percent of the state's pastures were in critical condition at the end of June.

"Rains throughout July have helped pastures recover and sustain animals, but moisture has varied, and 40 to 45 percent of the pastures are still critical," he said. "Producers with some pastures in southwest Mississippi needed to feed hay to help sustain animals this summer, but rains are helping pastures rebound there."

Lemus, who is also a researcher with the Mississippi Agricultural and Forestry Experiment Station, said producers need to try to extend the grazing season by delaying animal access to grasses, such as fescue, bermudagrass, or bahiagrass, because corn and other supplements are going to be so expensive.

"Hay production is down this year, and those who have it are hesitant to sell until they know what prices will do," he said. "The first cutting was fine. The second had low yields, and then, third cuttings have been delayed. Hay growers who usually cut on 30-day intervals are going to 45-day intervals, which can reduce quality and might require expensive supplements for animals later."

Lemus said growers have seen increased populations of grasshoppers, but they are not causing significant damage.

"After these rains, we need to watch for army worms as new vegetation begins growing," he said. "Already, we are seeing populations increase."

next year in 2013," said Vilsack.

Commodity prices are different from actual prices that we see in the stores the next day. And while commodity prices are on the rise, Vilsack argues that those increases will not translate into immediate price increases.

The Secretary also chastised any business currently engaged in price gouging.

"If folks are using this opportunity to raise prices inappropriately, then shame on them," Vilsack said.

Vilsack instead points to the high energy costs associated with transporting food as the culprit for any recent fluctuation in supermarket prices.

Disaster Low Interest Loans Available In Mississippi For Drought

By Matthew Young
Public Affairs Specialist
U.S. Small Business Administration

The U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) announced that federal economic injury disaster loans are available to small businesses, small agricultural cooperatives, small businesses engaged in aquaculture, and most private non-profit organizations of all sizes located in Mississippi as a result of drought that began on January 3, 2012.

The SBA's disaster declaration includes the following counties: Hancock, Harrison, Pearl River, and Stone in Mississippi; and the parish of Saint Tammany in Louisiana.

"When the Secretary of Agriculture issues a disaster declaration to help farmers recover from damages and losses to crops, the Small Business Administration issues a declaration to eligible entities affected by the same disaster," said Frank Skaggs, director of SBA's Field Operations Center East in Atlanta.

Under this declaration, the SBA's Economic Injury Disaster Loan program is available to eligible farm-related and nonfarm-related entities that suffered financial losses as a direct result of this disaster. With the exception of aquaculture enterprises, SBA cannot provide disaster loans to agricultural producers, farmers, or ranchers. Nurseries are eligible to apply for economic injury disaster loans for losses caused by drought conditions.

The loan amount can be up to $2 million with interest rates of 3 percent for private non-profit organizations of all sizes and 4 percent for small businesses, with terms up to 30 years. The SBA determines eligibility based on the size of the applicant, type of activity, and its financial resources. Loan amounts and terms are set by the SBA and are based on each applicant's financial condition. These working capital loans may be used to pay fixed debts, payroll, accounts payable, and other bills that could have been paid had the disaster not occurred. The loans are not intended to replace lost sales or profits.

Applicants may apply online using the Electronic Loan Application (ELA) via SBA's secure website at <https://disasterloan.sba.gov/ela>.

Disaster loan information and application forms may also be obtained by calling the SBA's Customer Service Center at 800-659-2955 (800-877-8339 for the deaf and hard-of-hearing) or by sending an email to disastercustomerservice@sba.gov. Loan applications can be downloaded from www.sba.gov. Completed applications should be mailed to: U.S. Small Business Administration, Processing and Disbursement Center, 14925 Kingsport Road, Fort Worth, TX 76155. Completed loan applications must be returned to SBA no later than March 12, 2013.

Agriculture Secretary: Drought Won't Affect Food Prices This Year

By USDA

Food prices may go up next year, but for now, the severe drought conditions should not have an immediate effect on prices at the grocery store according to Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack.

Longleaf Pine Initiative

By Kurt Readus
Acting State Conservationist
NRCS

Many years ago, longleaf pine was king – back when cities like Purvis and Wiggins were tucked away in one of the nation's largest longleaf belts. But now, longleaf isn't quite so common. Forests have declined steadily during the past 200 years, succumbing to pressures of timbering, urbanization, and fire suppression. Ninety-seven percent of the longleaf pine range, which originally spanned 90 million acres from southwestern Virginia to eastern Texas, has vanished.

Mississippi landowners wanting to create or restore longleaf pine stands can apply for financial assistance with the Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS), which is administered through NRCS's working lands financial assistance programs.

Longleaf pine offers landowners the greatest opportunity to practice multiple use management. Longleaf pines provide valuable forest products, pine straw production, scenic beauty, good wildlife habitat, and harbor many threatened and endangered species. Longleaf pine is also the best tree species to use in a silvopasture system.

These forests are home to some of the most diverse plant communities in the South, if not the world. Landowners in Mississippi have realized the economic value of a pole-size longleaf pine stand. The price the landowners are receiving for their high-quality, straight-grained dimensional lumber and their long straight poles and pilings is attracting more people to plant longleaf pines. Timber buyers recognize the quality of these trees and are paying top prices for the products.

Recent nursery and silvicultural improvements have improved the quality of longleaf seedlings and reduced the amount of time it takes to get the seedlings up and out of the grass stage. These improvements allow the longleaf pine to compete with the early growth rates of other Longleaf pine is a high quality timber tree, well suited to a range of products - poles, piling, posts, sawlogs, plywood, and pulpwood. They also provide pine straw production, scenic beauty, good wildlife habitat, and harbor many threatened and endangered species.

Southern pines.

Longleaf pine is more resistant to insect and disease pests such as Southern pine beetles and fusiform rust than other Southern pines. Longleaf pine is also more resistant to fire than other Southern pines and can be burned at an early age maintaining early successional habitat, benefitting many wildlife species like bobwhite quail.

Because of the tree's smaller crown density and deep root system, longleaf pine is not as susceptible to wind damage as other southern pines. The longleaf pine stands withstood Hurricane Katrina's wind 48 percent better than the loblolly pine stands, according to one study.

The longleaf pines produce the longer needles that are preferred landscape mulch, and the sale of pine straw provides a steady source of income from these stands. Longleaf pine needles are longer and easier to bale, last longer than other mulches, and have a distinguished red color that enhances the landscape.

Some landowners report they are making more money from selling pine straw than selling timber. This could also provide an additional source of income for a small forest landowner.

Finally, longleaf pine is the best species to use in a silvopasture system due to the smaller crown density, which allows more sunlight to filter through the tree crown canopy to the grass below.

As part of the initiative, NRCS and its conservation partners in nine states are helping private landowners improve the sustainability and profitability of Longleaf pine forest ecosystems. Those states involved in the initiative include Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, and Virginia.

Muscadine Field Day Changes Its Location

By Keri Collins Lewis
MSU Ag Communications

Muscadine grape growers interested in the latest research and recommendations will gather at the Beaumont Experiment Station in Perry County on August 16.

After meeting in Pearl River County for several years, the Mississippi State University Extension Service and Mississippi Agricultural and Forestry Experiment Station moved the annual meeting to Beaumont.

"Several muscadine cultivars are grown at the Beaumont Experiment Station, including Black Beauty, Carlos, Magnolia, Supreme, and Tara, so we wanted to bring growers here for a closer look," said Eric Stafne, Extension fruit crops specialist.

Experts from the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Research Service and MSU Extension Service will discuss a variety of topics, including insects and diseases, best production practices, how to fertilize muscadine vines, and cultivar selection.

This free program is from 9 to 11 a.m., and registration begins at 8:30 a.m.

For more information, contact Stafne at (601) 403-8939 or estafne@ext.msstate.edu.
