Highs and Lows Make News For State's Corn

By Linda Breazeale
MSU Ag Communications

The drought across the nation's Corn Belt is contributing to record high grain prices and near-record low river levels, both of which are impacting Mississippi's corn.

Corn prices are at $8 per bushel and have been trading in that range for the past couple of weeks. This is compared to about $5.20 per bushel at the start of June before the drought really took hold.

"Mississippi is expected to harvest a new record-yielding corn crop this season, so the volume of corn handled and shipped will be high," said Erick Larson, small grains specialist with Mississippi State University's Extension Service.

"The state's previous record yield was 148 bushels per acre in 2007. Growers have harvested much of the irrigated crop in the Delta and yields are exceptional, often running significantly more than 200 bushels per acre. Dryland yields are going to be more hit or miss, particularly in north Mississippi counties which received little rainfall during June. There is a lot of nonirrigated corn yet to be harvested, but I am hopeful the state dryland crop will average about 130," he said. "Grains in the Delta, where irrigated yields generally have been exceptional and consistent, usually go to the river for transportation."

Despite several weeks of drought in June and early July, the state's corn benefited tremendously from below-normal temperatures during key reproductive periods.

"Corn is garnering the brunt of river level issues because harvest is in full swing and is earlier than other crops," he said. "The river may become an issue for soybeans later, particularly if water levels drop farther."

Speaking at the recent North Mississippi Row Crops Field Day in Verona, Mississippi's Commissioner of Agriculture and Commerce Cindy Hyde-Smith said corn and soybeans are the primary crops impacted by the nation's growing drought.

Although most of the state's crops are unhurt by the drought gripping 80 percent of the nation's farmland, the Commissioner said Mississippi River levels directly impact transportation costs of harvested crops, primarily those on the western side of the state.

"The loss of one foot of water results in the loss of 204 tons of cargo capacity per barge. With tows in the lower Mississippi River consisting of 30 to 45 barges each, the reduction in size loads can result in a reduction of 9,000 tons," she said. "This would be the equivalent of adding 130 tractor-trailer trucks to the highways or 570 rail cars on the rail system for just one large tow. This can hinder our commodities from getting where they need to be, and we know what that does to prices."

John Michael Riley, Extension agricultural economist, said barge transportation for crops is significantly less expensive than other transportation methods.

"Based on current data from the

The 2012 harvest is under way on Mississippi's 840,000 acres of corn with most growers reporting record or near-record yields. The record, 148 bushels per acre, was set in 2007.

U.S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Marketing Service, transportation rates are $1.88 per bushel for semi-trucks, 91 cents per bushel for rail cars, and 35 cents per bushel for barges," he said. "Shipping via the river achieves savings of about 80 percent and 60 percent compared to truck and rail, respectively."

Drew Smith with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers said the river gauge in Vicksburg is approaching the zero mark. This year's levels compare to 1988's, when the level hit minus 1.6 and the mid-1960s, when it reached minus 3 and minus 4 levels. He said the main river channel will have the 9 feet needed for navigation, but in some areas it will not be wide enough for tow boats to pass each other.

"The bigger challenge comes at the ports, especially at the mouths, and at channel crossings," Smith said. "Barges are compensating by carrying lighter loads."

- 2 large eggs, slightly beaten

Bring grits, chicken broth, milk, salt and red pepper to a boil in a medium saucepan over medium-high heat; reduce heat to low, and simmer, stirring occasionally, 4 to 5 minutes or until thickened. Stir in butter and cheeses until melted. Gradually stir about one-fourth of hot grits mixture into eggs; add egg mixture to remaining hot grits mixture, stirring constantly. - 3 tablespoons sugar

Stir together sweet potatoes, butter, and 1 cup milk until well blended. Add flour, baking soda, and sugar, stirring just until dry ingredients are moistened. Add remaining 1/4 cup milk to moisten dough, if needed. Turn dough out onto a lightly floured surface; knead 8 to 10 times. Pat or roll dough to a 3/4-inch thickness; cut with a 2-inch round cutter. Preheat oven to 400°. Chop pecans in a food processor 20 seconds or until finely chopped. Stir together pecans, brown sugar, and pepper. Place half of bacon in a single layer on a lightly greased wire rack in an aluminum foil-lined baking sheet. Repeat procedure with remaining bacon, placing on another lightly greased wire rack in a second foil-lined baking sheet. Press pecan mixture on top of bacon slices, coating well. Melt butter in a large saucepan over medium heat; add bacon, and cook, stirring occasionally, 5 to 7 minutes or until done. Add ham and next 3 ingredients; sauté 3 to 4 minutes or until onion is translucent. Reduce heat to medium-low. Add flour. Cook, stirring constantly, 3 to 5 minutes or until golden brown. Slowly whisk in milk, beef broth and coffee; bring to a boil over high heat; stirring occasionally. Reduce heat to low. Simmer, stirring often, 14 to 18 minutes or until thickened. Remove from heat. Consider Watermelon Farming

By Peyton Little
Student at Simpson Academy

Watermelon farming can provide a good source of additional income for farmers. Because most farmers already own land and farm equipment, there may not be a large additional cost to prepare for farming watermelons. Every crop requires specific needs that need to be addressed to be successful. You will need to own or rent land depending on the amount you plan to produce.

Also needed are seeds and a greenhouse for an early planting date, potting soil, a tractor and row hipper for preparing rows, black plastic to cover rows, a seedling transplanting implement, pesticides and spray rig, fertilizer, fertilizer distributor, and trailers to haul watermelons out of the field.

Planting starts in March when seeds are planted in trays of potting soil and placed in a greenhouse. Watermelons are cold sensitive plants and must be held in a greenhouse until temperatures warm up and allow the farmer to transplant seedlings in the spring (usually April-May). Before transplanting, the ground needs to be prepared by disking and preparing rows about six feet apart. Rows are covered with plastic to increase soil temperature, improve drainage, and help control weeds. It is also important to manage for weeds with labeled pre-emerge and post-emerge herbicide in the field before transplanting.

Crop management begins once the field is rowed with plastic, free of weeds, and transplanted with seedlings from the greenhouse. Management involves scouting the fields for insect/disease pests and irrigation (if available). Drip lines or soaker lines connected to a water source are placed under the plastic near the transplant. Water can be a significant cost in dry summers, so water is only used sparingly.

A number of fungicides are available for disease prevention and control. There are some insect pests to look for during the growing process as well. Cucumber beetles, stink bugs, and aphids are some pests common to watermelon fields and should be controlled earlier before much damage is done to the crop.

Watermelons should be ready for picking in June, because you will make the most money during Fourth of July holiday when watermelons are in the highest demand. It is also crucial to have buyers lined up before you harvest so you are not stuck with several loads of watermelons and no buyers. Average production size for one farmer ranges from about twenty to thirty acres. A successful watermelon farmer historically yields more profit per acre than tradition row crops like corn, soybeans, and cotton.

For more information on growing watermelons contact your local county Extension Service.

Peyton Little is a student at Simpson Academy in Mendenhall, MS, where his Senior Project was to write an article about agriculture. Peyton's goal is to educate farmers and possible future farmers about the different types of farming that are profitable.

Advertising Guidelines

The Mississippi Market Bulletin is published on the 1st and 15th of each month by the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce. The Mississippi Market Bulletin is an important way for the Department to disseminate news and information about issues affecting Mississippi's agriculture industry and the Department's operations.

Through its classified advertising section, the Bulletin provides a forum for Mississippi residents to buy and sell agricultural related items while also giving statewide exposure to small farmers who might not normally have the economic resources for such widespread advertising. The Bulletin does not publish commercial or display ads and all items offered for sale must have been produced, raised, grown or operated on the seller's property. Businesses, corporations, dealerships, brokers or other commercial enterprises are not allowed to advertise in the Mississippi Market Bulletin.

Advertising rules and guidelines have been established for the Mississippi Market Bulletin in order to comply with regulations enforced by the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce and to maintain the objectives of the publication. The staff of the Mississippi Market Bulletin reserves the right to edit, revise or reject any advertisement.

The Mississippi Market Bulletin assumes no responsibility for any notice appearing in the Bulletin nor for any transaction resulting from published notices. Advertisers are cautioned that it is against the law to misrepresent any product offered for sale in public notices or advertisements carried in any publication that is delivered by the United States Postal Service.

- In order to advertise in the Mississippi Market Bulletin you must be a subscriber. To place an ad, you must include your name, mailing address and account number that the subscription is listed under on each ad that you submit (this information will not be printed). Each subscriber is allowed to advertise two ads in the Bulletin, listing one ad per category.
- All listings must be agriculture related (raised, grown, produced or operated on your farm). At the top of your ad, write the category that the ad should be listed under. We reserve the right to edit, revise or reject each ad. Please print or type your ad.
- There is a 30-word limit for classified advertisements, this includes: price (on the item you are selling), your city, county and telephone number or name and complete address must be included in the ad if you do not list a telephone number. Ads cannot be held over from one issue to another. You must submit them for each issue.
- Out-of-state residents are not eligible to advertise with the following exceptions: Out-of-state ads are allowed in the "Wanting To Buy" category. Out-of-state ads are allowed for individuals owning farm property within the state that is being offered for sale (consisting of 10 acres or more).

High-Tech Grower Meets Local Demand

By Linda Breazeale

Steve Hale is banking on today's young consumers embracing sustainable vegetable production for the good of the environment and their health.

This year is Hale's first year in the hydroponic tomato business. St Bethany Fresh tomato farm, located just west of Tupelo in Pontotoc County, started with 3,000 plants in December. By mid-April, Hale was harvesting blemish-free, vine-ripened tomatoes.

"Ideally, we would not have peak harvest when everyone else has summer garden tomatoes, but this is a learning process. I've never met a hydroponic farmer who knew anything about hydroponic farming before getting into the business," said Hale, a Mississippi State University entomology graduate.

Hale turned to CropKing, an Ohio-based company, for guidance in growing tomatoes in soil-free, perlite containers. Computer programs adjust nutrients, water levels, and temperatures for the plants in the greenhouse. While traditional tomato plants are staked and grown upright for a short growing season, Hale's tomato vines have a longer life. By August, vines were about 30 feet long. The greenhouse environment enables him to reduce the impact of diseases and insects -- factors that challenge and frustrate traditional gardeners.

diseases, and we have insect screens to eliminate the need for insecticides," Hale said. "The sensors allow us to apply just the right amount of water directly to the roots."

Hale said he is counting on the public continuing to ask for local produce grown with reduced needs for chemicals.

"Hydroponic and organic farming are not fads. People are realizing the need to eat healthier, and our business' future depends on the health attitudes of younger consumers," he said. "If we are successful, you will see these businesses popping up everywhere."

Before entering the hydroponic tomato business, Hale worked as a crop consultant. St Bethany Fresh is a family affair that provides additional career opportunities for his adult children, Stephen Hale and Leah Beth Murphy, whose names inspired the farm's name. Newcomers to the greenhouse tomato business, they have taken part in MSU's Greenhouse Tomato Short Course, held annually in Raymond.

Rick Snyder, professor and Extension vegetable specialist and short course organizer, said greenhouses in Mississippi can provide vine-ripened tomatoes throughout the winter months, when field-grown tomatoes are not available. Snyder is also a tomato researcher with the Mississippi Agricultural and Forestry Experiment Station.

"Most of our Mississippi greenhouse tomato growers harvest red, vine-ripened tomatoes from November through June, when they don't compete with growers and home gardeners with outdoor tomatoes," Snyder said. "This allows them to get a good price for their high quality, locally grown produce."

Mitchell McCamey, co-owner of the Neon Pig restaurant in Tupelo, buys St Bethany Fresh tomatoes regularly. He said many people have the misconception that local produce is more expensive.

"It is easier to develop relationships with local producers, and they provide a superior product to something that is shipped great distances," McCamey said. "If I ever had a problem with these tomatoes, St Bethany Fresh would replace the product at no additional cost. It comes down to our relationship and their desire to keep customers satisfied."

McCamey said his restaurant's niche is providing food from local producers.

"Some food buyers have no idea where their food comes from, and they just order it without even asking," he said.

Hale said he believes increased awareness is key to the success of locally grown, sustainable produce.

"We are not expecting to get rich doing this, but we just want to make a living," Hale said. "Even with our summer heat and humidity, I believe we can grow hydroponic tomatoes in Mississippi, and I'm going to prove it."

Fight Feral Hogs With Online Info

By Delta Farm Press

Wild pigs may be a boon to hunters but to many of the nation's landowners they are a nuisance, an economic and environmental liability, and a disease hazard.

Farmers and landowners can arm themselves with information from a new website dedicated to providing research-based, useful solutions for feral hogs that damage their crops and property. The site, http://extension.org/feral_hogs lists resources ranging from the history and biology of feral hogs to designs for corral traps.

The website, organized by a national consortium of wildlife biologists and Extension Service specialists, includes both state-specific help and general suggestions. Mississippi State University's feral hog website, <http://wildpiginfo.msstate.edu/> is linked to the national site and includes the educational video,

"A Pickup Load of Pigs: The Feral Swine Pandemic."

"Because wild pig damage is a nationwide concern, Extension personnel decided a collaborative website with input from specialists all over the country would be informative for natural resource managers and the public," said Bronson Strickland, associate Extension professor at MSU.

"What may be most useful is an extensive FAQ section that addresses most of the questions people have about wild pigs," added Strickland.
