Rains Won't Dampen Christmas Tree Sales

By Linda Breazeale
MSU Ag Communications

Christmas tree growers were thinking about the holidays when Hurricane Isaac made landfall August 28, knowing the winds and rains would bring additional work before trees would be ready for the 2012 harvest.

Stephen Dicke, Extension forestry professor at Mississippi State University's Central Mississippi Research and Extension Center in Raymond, said storm damage should not dampen sales of Mississippi's Christmas trees.

"The wonderful weather the first half of the year provided us a great crop across the state," he said. "But

Mississippi Christmas trees need four years to reach the popular heights of 6 to 8 feet. About 900 trees can be grown per acre, such as these growing in Newton County on the Lazy Acres Plantation in 2011. (MSU Ag Communications file photo/Kat Lawrence) when Isaac hit, saturated soil and strong winds forced growers to put in extra work to straighten trees, primarily located near the coast and in southwest Mississippi.

Dicke said Mississippi sales should increase about 11 percent over 2011 based on consumer demand and tree availability.

"A Christmas tree production increase by our growers is a good sign," he said. "The supply of locally grown Christmas trees will be able to meet demand in most areas of the state."

Dicke said Mississippi has a large number of new growers who have been in the business less than four years. New farms should enable the state's production to remain steady as some growers leave the business each year.

"Based on the number of new growers, the future of Christmas tree production in Mississippi looks good," he said. "Maintaining healthy trees is a challenge and a lot of work. If growers don't enjoy it, they're not going to do this."

Bob Shearer of Purvis understands the commitment needed. He has almost 40 years of experience growing Christmas trees.

"This business takes a lot of patience. You are going to wait four years before you see any return on your investment," he said. "My wife and I love promoting family and happy times during Christmas. We enjoy having children's groups out, too."

Shearer and his wife, Mary, grew the Mississippi winner of the Southern Christmas Tree Association's Christmas Tree Contest held in August in Hammond, Louisiana. The Shearers started their Christmas tree farm in 1971, left the business for a few years in the mid-1990s and returned in 1997.

Hurricane Isaac was tough on his farm, both from winds blowing over trees and rains increasing cercospora needle blight fungus, which is common in Leyland cypress.

"Quality is important. We want every tree to look great," he said. "If a tree has the fungus, it may not be obvious until it is cut and put in a house when it will shed needles faster. The Christmas season is not a season for disappointment."

Shearer said his Lamar County farm is on schedule to sell its first 2012 trees on Thanksgiving afternoon.

To find a local Christmas tree farm, go to the Southern Christmas Tree Association website at <http://southernchristmastrees.org> or look on page 26 in this issue of the Mississippi Market Bulletin.

Portrait Unveiling of Tribal Chief Phyliss Anderson at Ag Museum

By Paige Manning
Director of Marketing and Public Relations - MDAC

A portrait of Chief Phyliss J. Anderson, Tribal Chief of the Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians (MBCI), was unveiled at a ceremony at the Mississippi Agriculture and Forestry Museum. Chief Anderson is the first female elected as Tribal Chief of the 10,000-member MBCI, and she is only the fourth Tribal Chief to be elected since the MBCI received federal recognition in 1945.

The unveiling ceremony took place in the Fitzgerald Building which features an array of Indian artifacts. Among those honoring Chief Anderson were Cindy Hyde-Smith, Commissioner of Agriculture and Commerce, who stated, "I am delighted to be a part of today's portrait unveiling ceremony honoring Chief Anderson. She exhibits such extraordinary leadership capabilities, and we are proud to feature her at the Mississippi Agriculture and Forestry Museum." Hyde-Smith added, "The foremost purpose of the Museum is to display our state's rich agriculture heritage, and the role of Native Americans, which includes the Choctaws, is very significant due to the fact that they were the first agriculturists in our state," added Hyde-Smith.

Chief Anderson was pleased to participate in the unveiling ceremony on behalf of the Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians. Chief Anderson stated, "Serving as the first female Chief of the Mississippi Choctaws is my distinct honor and privilege. With today's unveiling, I am humbled that my portrait is featured with other important and visionary past leaders of our tribe." Chief Anderson added, "The story of Mississippi must always start with the Choctaws. Our people were the original inhabitants of this area, and for many centuries, we have been caretakers of this land. Today, we are the only federally recognized tribe in the state, and our reservation lands are spread across 35,000 acres in 10 Mississippi counties and into Tennessee. I hope visitors to the Mississippi Agriculture and Forestry Museum enjoy learning about Mississippi's varied and rich cultural heritage. Again, on behalf of the Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians, thank you for this recognition."

The Mississippi Agricultural and Forestry Museum, which features the National Agricultural Aviation Museum, depicts the important role that the agriculture and forestry industries have played in Mississippi's history and helps educate the general public on how these industries have shaped Mississippi's economy through the years. The Museum, located at 1150 Lakeland Drive in Jackson, is open Monday through Saturday from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. For more information about the Museum, call (601) 432-4500, visit www.msagmusuem.org, or visit the Mississippi Agriculture and Forestry Museum on Facebook.

Troops Enjoy MSU Beef Donated by Beef Council

By Kaitlyn Byrne
MSU Ag Communications

National Guard troops stationed in Afghanistan enjoyed a taste of home when the Mississippi Beef Council sent them a special care package.

The council supported the production of beef jerky by the Mississippi State University Meat Laboratory to send to National Guard units engaged in helping native farmers improve agricultural practices.

Sammy Blossom, Mississippi Beef Council executive director, said the council started the beef jerky project about six years ago and has used the MSU Meat Lab the past two years.

Tim Armstrong, MSU Meats Lab manager, said all of the meat for the jerky came from MSU-raised animals. The most recent shipment was about 280 pounds of beef jerky.

"It was made with our beef and produced in our lab, and we were happy to help with this project to show our gratitude to our troops," he said.

Blossom said the council originally decided to send beef jerky because it does not require refrigeration and is a treat from home that troops cannot often get overseas.

"As an organization, we really wanted to do something to show our gratitude for everything our troops do, and we figured using our resources to make beef jerky was a great idea," he said.

Blossom said the council has sent as many as 3,000 packs of beef jerky per year to troops. To pay for the gift, the council uses funds from the beef check-off program, a national promotion, education and research project supported by cattle sales.

In April, the MSU Extension Service trained 54 soldiers in basic agriculture to prepare for their mission in Afghanistan, working with local growers to help improve their agricultural production practices and sustainability.

Mississippi Beef Council's most recent beef jerky shipment went to this unit of Mississippi National Guard troops and a unit of Nebraska National Guard troops working with Mississippi's state veterinarian Jim Watson to improve native livestock practices in Afghanistan.

Blossom said a flat rate box holds about 70 packs of jerky, and the council includes a handwritten note in each box thanking the troops for their service, encouraging them to share the jerky with others and explaining who sent the gift.

"We've gotten some great thank you letters back from the soldiers," Blossom said. "We got a note from one group saying they used half of the jerky to give to kids there to help build friendships that they otherwise would not have been able to build."

Blossom said if possible, counties send the jerky to units with someone from their area. In recent years, six to 10 county associations have participated in the project.

The MSU Meat Laboratory is a unit of the Mississippi Agricultural and Forestry Experiment Station. Products from the Meat Lab are sold in the MAFES Sales Store.

Beef jerky, produced by the Mississippi State Meats Lab and sponsored by the Mississippi Beef Council, was recently sent to two National Guard units serving in the Middle East. Both units are engaged in helping native farmers improve their agricultural practices. State Veterinarian Dr. Jim Watson (third from left) sent this picture, along with thanks from the unit of Nebraska National Guard troops he is serving with in Afghanistan.
