What You May Not Know About Honey

By National Honey Board

Ever stop to think about what's in a bottle of honey? It's really quite simple. There are no added preservatives, no added flavorings, and no added coloring. Take a look at the additive-free journey that honey takes from bee to bottle and see for yourself.

The bottle of honey on your supermarket shelf is nothing more than honest to goodness sweetness the way nature intended. Honey is honey, it's just that simple. A bottle of pure honey contains the natural sweet substance produced by honey bees from the nectar of plants or secretions of living parts of plants.

Honey is made by bees in one of the world's most efficient facilities, the beehive. The 60,000 or so bees in a beehive may collectively travel as much as 55,000 miles and visit more than two million flowers to gather enough nectar to make just a pound of honey.

Honey gets its start as flower nectar, which is collected by bees, naturally broken down into simple sugars and stored in honeycombs. The unique design of the honeycomb, coupled with constant fanning by the bees' wings, causes evaporation to take place, creating the thick, sweet liquid we know as honey.

The color and flavor of honey varies from hive to hive based on the type of flower nectar collected by the bees. For example, honey made from Orange Blossom nectar might be light in color, whereas honey from Avocado or Wildflowers might have a dark amber color.

Beekeepers, large and small, harvest honey by collecting the honeycomb frames and scraping off the wax cap that bees make to seal off honey in each cell. Once the caps are removed, the frames are placed in an extractor — a centrifuge that spins the frames, forcing honey out of the comb. The honey is spun to the sides of the extractor, where gravity pulls it to the bottom and it can be collected.

After the honey is extracted, it is strained to remove any remaining pieces of wax or other particles. Some beekeepers and bottlers might heat the honey to make it easier to strain, but this does nothing to alter the liquid's natural composition. It only makes the straining process easier and more effective.

After straining, it's time to bottle, label and distribute the honey to retail outlets. Whether the container is glass or plastic, or purchased at the grocery store or farmers market, if the ingredient label says pure honey, you can rest assured that nothing was added, from bee to hive to bottle.

Honey has the ability to decrease the bitterness and sourness intensity in bakery foods while increasing the sweetness and improving the saltiness perception. Honey's sugars are precursors to the Maillard reaction, which means that they provide natural color and browning to the finished product. This increases the consumer acceptability of the product by producing caramel notes.

Many people think of honey as a drizzle in desserts or a topping for toast. But now more than ever, honey's being recognized as a versatile ingredient and pantry staple in the kitchen. All-natural honey gives your recipes unbeatable flavor and unmatched functional benefits. From balancing flavors to providing moisture to baked goods, one-ingredient honey performs a slew of tasks, all from one little bottle.

When substituting honey for granulated sugar in formulas, begin by substituting honey for up to half of the sugar called for in the recipe. For bakery foods, make sure to reduce the oven temperature by 25°F to prevent over-browning and reduce any liquid called for by 25% for each part of honey used.

Honey may be used as the sole sweetener in many cookie and cracker formulations. In soft style cookies, honey may be used at 8% to 15% of the formula weight. In crisp cookies, honey is typically used at 3% to 5% of the formulation. For most cookie or cracker applications, use mild and light colored honeys because they do not mask the flavor of spices, fruits, and nuts.

Honey is a natural and safe food for adults and older children, but it absolutely should not be given to babies. Honey contains pollen and spores that the nectar bees collect to make honey. Infant immune systems are not advanced enough to fight off possible botulism spores that honey may contain. The risk is only a concern in babies less than one year old.

Properly processed, packaged, and stored honey retains its quality for a long time. Honey stored in sealed containers can remain stable for decades and even centuries. Store honey at room temperature, your kitchen counter or pantry shelf is ideal. Storing honey in the refrigerator accelerates the honey's crystallization.

Crystallization is the natural process in which liquid in honey becomes solid. If your honey crystallizes, simply place the honey jar in warm water and stir until the crystals dissolve. Or, place the honey in a microwave-safe container with the lid off and microwave it, stirring every 30 seconds, until the crystals dissolve. Be careful not to boil or scorch the honey. Remember, if in doubt, throw it out, and purchase a new jar of honey.

1 cup all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup 2% low-fat milk
1/4 cup honey
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
1 egg

In a large bowl, combine cornmeal, flour, baking powder, baking soda, and salt. In a smaller bowl, whisk together milk, honey, oil, and egg. Pour honey mixture into dry mixture and mix until just combined. Spoon batter into a well-greased 9x9-inch pan. Bake at 350° F for 30 minutes or until a wooden pick inserted near center comes out clean. Serve warm.

HONEY LIME CHICKEN SKEWERS

2 tablespoons honey
3 tablespoons soy sauce
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 lime, juiced
1 pound chicken breast strips, skinless & boneless

In a small bowl, whisk all liquid ingredients together until completely blended. Pour mixture into a freezer bag and add in chicken strips. Reseal bag and gently shake to cover chicken strips. Allow to marinate for 2 hours. Next, prepare skewers by soaking bamboo sticks in water for 15 minutes. Remove chicken strips from marinade and skewer onto bamboo sticks. Grill on medium to high heat for 8 minutes or until juices are clear and chicken is fully cooked.

1/2 cup peanut butter
1/2 cup honey
1 1/2 cups crisp rice cereal
1/2 cup raisins

Using hands, shape mixture into 1-inch balls. Roll balls in sprinkles and place on a cookie sheet. Refrigerate for one hour. Cookies should feel firm when touched. Serve right away or place in tightly covered container and store in refrigerator.

Parsley, minced
Paprika

Arrange medallions in 9x13x2-inch baking pan. In a small bowl, beat egg; add oil and beat again. Stir in vinegar, honey, poultry sauce, salt and pepper. Using fiber brush, baste medallions with sauce. Bake at 350° F 50 to 60 minutes or until tender; turn and baste medallions every 15 minutes. Spread with any remaining sauce during last 15 minutes. Place on warmed platter. Sprinkle with paprika and parsley to taste.

My Food Comes From Where?

By Lise Foy

Director of Project Management
MS Agriculture & Forestry Museum

April is national pecan month. The second week in April is national garden week. You can also find nationally recognized 'holidays' like peanut butter and jelly day, eggs benedict day, cheeseball day, pig in a blanket day, pretzel day, prime rib day and shrimp scampi day in the month of April. In Mississippi, we also celebrate honey during April.

To get us through just this one month, we need pecan orchards, vegetable and fruit growers, peanut farmers, poultry and egg producers, dairy producers, wheat farmers, beef producers, shrimpers, and beekeepers! And, you can find all of these here in Mississippi.

Just take a minute to think about where all that 'stuff' on the grocery store shelves comes from.

The main gallery in the Heritage Center at the Ag Museum tells the story of the hunter gatherer civilization up to the mechanization and development of the modern agricultural industry in Mississippi. During the 19th and 20th centuries, many innovations were made that allowed farming tasks to be done with speed and on a scale previously impossible. Today, one man is able to manage thousands of acres to produce food for hundreds of people because of the continued advances in production agriculture.

Just 100 years or so ago, many people in Mississippi were subsistence farmers, growing what they ate out of necessity. The common scene was a large garden with every vegetable imaginable, a hog to butcher, a few chickens for eggs, and a dairy cow for milk. The tools they had to work with were man-powered, like a hoe, or animal-powered, like a plow with a mule.

I love my garden in the summer, as I know many Mississippians do. It's a kind of therapy to dig in the dirt and watch the vegetables grow. The food from the garden just tastes better. But, when the tomato horn worms move in, the rain won't fall, and the deer find your salad bar, unlike previous generations, we have the Piggly Wiggly there as back up if

The Heritage Center gallery features artifacts like mold board plows dating back to 1880 and various horse or mule drawn planters used during the same era that give visitors the opportunity to visualize the hard work and sweat that went into preparing to raise a crop. The invention of animal pulled implements was a great improvement over the initial human powered tools, making the process considerably more efficient. On the grounds at the museum, Joe and Sally, the resident mules, give visitors a perspective of the size of the animals used to power these tools.

The substitution of other power sources for animal strength began in the early 20th century with the introduction of the tractor. This kind of power offered advantages over animal or human power because the amount of power produced did not depend on the forward movement of the tractor as with the ground wheel of an animal powered machine. The tractor could drive plows into the ground forcefully at the beginning of a furrow and lift them out at its end. From the beginning, the tractor had potential that animal-drawn devices never did.

However, the transition to horseless farming came slowly to Mississippi. Progress toward mechanization was slowed by an almost non-existent road system. During the winter, roads became mud-bound, a condition that was as evident in 1918 as it was one hundred years earlier.

On display in the gallery and on the museum grounds are some of the first mechanical means of pulling a plow. The 1890 Peerless steam powered tractor, located near the sawmill in Small Town, Mississippi, is a steel wheeled, single cylinder tractor with a steering mechanism operated by a large chain connected to the front axle. This tractor could be used to operate other types of equipment like a portable sawmill, gristmill, or small cotton gin by means of a flat belt.

There are several examples of internal combustion powered tractors including models manufactured by John Deere, Ford, Case, Massey-Ferguson, and Farmall. Two gas powered tractors of particular interest are the 1910 International Harvester Titans located near the McDavid Cabin. These steel wheel tractors have two cylinder engines with an external oil system.

This story really gets me thinking about that garden and planning what to plant. I've read that we should wait until the leaves on the oak trees are the size of a squirrel's foot and my father says to wait for the pecan trees to put on leaves because they know when the last frost has come. But, it's hard to wait. My hoe is ready to meet the soil for another summer and I'm ready for that first tomato sandwich!

As you celebrate all of the food related 'holidays' in April, think about where those commodities came from and how today, if you so choose, you don't have to plant the peanuts, milk the cow, gather the eggs and honey, or even catch the shrimp to make your supper tonight. Just thank a farmer for handling all of that for you.

USDA Announces 45th General Sign-up for the Conservation Reserve Program

By J. Latrice Hill
(Acting) Outreach Director
USDA/FSA/DAFO

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack announced that the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) will conduct a four-week general sign-up for the Conservation Reserve Program (CRP), beginning May 20 and ending on June 14. CRP has a 27-year legacy of protecting the nation's natural resources through voluntary participation, while providing significant economic and environmental benefits to rural communities across the United States.

Currently, about 27 million acres are enrolled in CRP. Producers that are accepted in the sign-up can receive cost-share assistance to plant long-term, resource-conserving covers, and receive an annual rental payment for the length of the contract (10-15 years).

Contracts on 3.3 million acres of CRP are set to expire on September 30, 2013. Producers with expiring contracts or producers with environmentally sensitive land are encouraged to evaluate their options under CRP.

Additional sign-ups for continuous CRP programs such as Highly Erodible Land Initiative and Initiative to Restore Grasslands, Wetlands, and Wildlife will be announced in spring 2013.

For more information on CRP and other FSA programs, visit a local FSA service center or www.fsa.usda.gov.

New Conservation Initiative Assists Ranchers of Ruminant Animals

By USDA Natural Resources
Conservation Service - Public Affairs

A new initiative in Mississippi aims to encourage ranchers of ruminant animals like sheep and goats to make conservation improvements to their operations. USDA's Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) is offering financial and technical assistance through the Small Ruminant Farmer Initiative to help these ranchers enhance their lands while cleaning and conserving water and improving soil.

This initiative was created to help meet the need of a growing commodity in Mississippi. Part of NRCS' Environmental Quality Incentives Program (EQIP), this initiative offers about $500,000 to Mississippi landowners. April 19 is the deadline for applications.

Assistance through this initiative will help ranchers install a variety of conservation practices that aim to boost water quality and quantity and increase soil health. Practices include fencing, ponds, and heavy use protection areas.

Ruminants are characterized by their "four" stomachs and "cud-chewing" behavior. There are about 150 different domestic and wild ruminant species, including sheep, goat, and red deer.

Eligible land includes pastureland, cutover, abandoned agricultural areas, and converted cropland. Incidental wooded areas are eligible when existing vegetation will support grazing and browsing animals. To be eligible, small ruminants must already be present.

"We want to engage Mississippi's ranchers and encourage them to use conservation to boost production and improve the quality of our waterways and soil," NRCS State Conservationist Homer Wilkes said. "We are seeing more ranchers of ruminant animals in Mississippi, and we created this initiative to ensure conservation practices are available for these operations."

All participants must meet conservation program eligibility requirements to receive financial assistance. This initiative places special emphasis on historically underserved producers during the ranking of applications.

For more information, contact your local field office or visit our website <http://www.nrcs.usda.gov/wps/portal/nrcs/site/national/home/>.

The Ag Museum resident mules 'Joe' and 'Sally,' give visitors a perspective of the size of the animals used to power various equipment.

Applications for Healthy Forests Reserve Program Due April 15

By Justin Fritscher
USDA-NRCS

USDA's Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) is encouraging agricultural producers in southern Mississippi to apply for assistance through the Healthy Forests Reserve Program (HFRP), a conservation program that restores forestlands.

Landowners participating in HFRP work with NRCS to restore, enhance and protect forests through easements, 30-year contracts and 10-year cost-share agreements. The program promotes the recovery of endangered and threatened species, such as the gopher tortoise and gopher frog, as well as species that are candidates for listing, such as the black pine snake. This program also works to improve plant and animal biodiversity and enhance carbon sequestration.

The program will be offered in 14 counties including Covington, Forrest, George, Greene, Hancock, Harrison, Jackson, Jones, Lamar, Marion, Pearl River, Perry, Stone, and Wayne.

HFRP is being implemented in coordination between NRCS and the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service. Eligible private forest landowners in selected counties in Mississippi can apply for HFRP at their local NRCS field offices. Applications for HFRP are due April 15.

"Healthy forests provide valuable habitat for important wildlife and clean our water and air," State Conservationist Homer Wilkes said. "This program allows NRCS to work with private landowners who want to nurture and improve their forestlands through an easement or long-term contract."

To be eligible, interested landowners must develop a forest management restoration plan that includes the implementation of conservation practices necessary to restore and enhance forested habitat for selected species listed as threatened or endangered, species eligible for listing, or a state species of special concern. NRCS will provide technical assistance to help program participants develop and implement their HFRP forest management restoration plans.

Three enrollment options will be available to eligible landowners: a 10-year cost-share agreement where the landowner may receive 50 percent of the average cost of approved conservation practices; a 30-year easement where the landowner may receive 75 percent of the easement value of the enrolled land and 75 percent of the average cost of approved habitat conservation practices; or a permanent easement where the landowner may receive up to 100 percent of the easement value of the enrolled land and up to 100 percent of the average cost of approved habitat conservation practices.

"Landowner Protections" will be made available to HFRP participants who agree, for a specified period, to restore or improve their land for threatened or endangered species habitat so that there is a net conservation benefit to the species. In exchange, the program participant will avoid future regulatory restrictions on the use of that land protected under the Endangered Species Act.

April Garden Calendar

Plant Shopping Tips

Garden centers and nurseries are full of plants right now. And it's time to get out and purchase some new plants for your yard and garden. With that in mind, here are some plant shopping tips to assist with your selections.

Smart Shopping for Annuals

These are purchased for fast growing, long lasting flowers or foliage. It is important to select healthy plants that have bushy growth that fills the pot. Foliage should be an even green color without obvious disease spots or insect damage. Even though it is tempting to purchase a plant in flower, in many cases, this should be avoided. A plant in flower, in some cases, has been fed a high nitrogen fertilizer to spur rapid growth and development—this can result in a plant that is a heavy feeder. When these plants are transplanted into the garden and their high-maintenance diet is not maintained they can quickly lose vigor. Look for plants that are just beginning to flower or are in bud. Sometimes plants are flowering because they have been in the pot too long and are too mature and leggy. These should be avoided, or if purchases, should be cut back to encourage densely branched new growth. Examples of these are verbena, marigold, salvia, and celosia. Continue pinching these plants to get that bushy plant with many flowering stems. Annuals like petunia and impatiens rarely have to be pinched to get bushy growth.

Smart Shopping for Perennials

These are purchased for their longevity in the garden and their season of attractiveness, whether that is foliage color or blooms. Since these plants will be residing in your garden for years to come, selection of well-rooted plants with a good rosette of healthy foliage is important. Most perennials will not be flowering in the pot so you should be familiar with the mature height, width, bloom color and other characteristics of the plant before you make your selection. Sometimes, this is all on the label, but it is a good idea to talk to the nurseryman or garden center help if you have questions about the performance or hardiness of these plants. You may ask their permission to pop the plant out of the pot to examine the roots, or ask them to do it for you. The roots should be a light tan or off white color and be plentiful, but not circling the root ball in a tight mat—this indicates the plant has been held to long in the pot and is pot bound. If you purchase a pot bound plant, before you plant, cut away the circling roots and tease the root ball apart to encourage growth of the new roots outward.

Preparing Your Vegetable Garden's Soil

By Mississippi State University Extension Service

Preparing the soil is one of the most important steps in gardening. Many garden tillers are not adequate equipment for the initial breaking of soil in a new garden site. Starting in early spring, disc or rake the soil several times at regular intervals to keep down weeds and to give a smooth, clod-free planting bed.

If you did not plow or spade the garden site in the fall, turn the soil in spring as soon as it is dry enough to work. A good test to determine if the soil can be worked is to mold a handful of soil into a ball. If the ball is not sticky but crumbles readily when pressed with your thumb, the soil is in good condition.

If you did not apply recommended lime to the garden site in the fall, apply both lime and recommended fertilizer in the spring. Plow or spade the soil, spread the lime and fertilizer, and mix it in with a disc, harrow, or rototiller.

Pulverize the soil and get a smooth, level surface by raking as soon as possible after turning. This helps to firm the soil, break up clods, and leave a smooth surface for seeding. Soil left in rough condition for several days after turning in the spring may dry out and form hard clods, making it much more difficult to prepare a good seedbed.

Prepare a small garden plot for planting by using a spade, shovel, or spading fork to turn the soil. Use a small tractor or garden tiller for a larger garden. Completely cover all plant material on top of the ground and work it into the soil when the soil is turned.

Where the soil is clay and level and likely to stay wet, use a hoe, rake, or tiller to pull the soil into raised rows that are 10 to 12 inches across on the tops. Let the sides slope gently to the walkways to provide good surface drainage.

Conventional row spacing is 36 to 40 inches apart, but spacing depends on a number of factors: equipment, garden size, and vegetables being grown. Rows for vigorously vining vegetables like watermelons, cantaloupes, pumpkins, and winter squash are usually 6 to 8 feet apart.

Raising Backyard Birds Requires Planning, Time

By Keri Collins Lewis
MSU Ag Communications

In response to the increasing popularity of raising chickens for eggs and meat, Mississippi State University Extension experts are offering tips for people interested in starting their own flock of backyard birds.

Tom Tabler, MSU Extension Service poultry specialist, said chickens are a great project, as long as everyone involved understands what they are signing on for.

"I like to talk about poultry as a livestock, and if you're going to raise livestock, it's a good starter project," he said. "You have lower start-up costs and easier care. It's not a cakewalk, but kids can learn responsibility and how to care for animals properly."

In addition to learning about costs and time involved, Tabler said people should research chicken breeds, because different breeds are suited to different purposes.

For example, someone interested in egg production would not need any roosters, and might consider Leghorns, which are productive layers. If meat production is the goal, other breeds, such as Cornish, are better suited for that purpose. Cochins and some Bantam breeds are considered more docile and thus better for small children interested in having a pet. Ameraucana hens lay colorful eggs but do not lay abundantly.

Jessica Wells, Extension instructor at MSU's Department of Poultry Science, said Mississippians interested in buying eggs to hatch or chicks to raise can find them locally, but they need to consider disease issues before bringing the birds home.

"I recommend contacting the poultry section of the Board of Animal Health," Wells said. "They keep a list of all of the flocks that are Mississippi Poultry Improvement Plan-certified through their office, which means the flocks have been tested for diseases."

Wells said backyard bird enthusiasts who do not purchase from state-certified growers should buy from a reputable hatchery that is National Poultry Improvement Plan certified.

"This route may be more expensive than buying from your neighbor or at the flea market, but it will pay off in the long run by yielding a happy, healthy flock," she said.

Chickens are vulnerable to predators, such as wild animals and family pets, and a pen is needed to keep them safe. A pen is the largest investment backyard birds require, but they don't have to be expensive, just secure.

"Cats, dogs, raccoons, coyotes, possums, foxes, hawks, and other flying predators will see your chickens as an easy and free meal if you don't have a proper structure that provides protection from every angle," Wells said. "Remember that animals can come in from the sides, top or bottom of the pen, and predators come in all sizes."

Wells said growers can find a variety of poultry pen plans online, but ready-made options exist too.

"If you don't want to construct your own pen, a simple chain-link dog pen can be used, as long as the top is secured. This can be something as simple as a tarp," she said. "Nest boxes should be built out of a solid material on the pen's back side."

Keeping the pens clean will help keep chickens healthy.

"Regular maintenance keeps fecal material low, fly populations down, and feed from being spilled and spoiling, which in turn cuts down on rodents," Wells said.

Chickens may snack on insects that wander through the yard, but they must have a nutritious feed to keep up their weight and regularly produce eggs.

"I don't recommend trying to mix your own feed," Wells said. "Premixed feeds have all the ingredients the birds need, at the right levels. People think they can feed food scraps or chicken scratch and save money on feed costs, but if the birds fill up on scraps and scratch before being fed normal chicken feed, they don't benefit from the feed's nutrition."

The bottom line is that raising chickens is work, but if done correctly from the beginning, it can be fun and fulfilling.

"If you don't provide proper care and management, neither you nor your birds will be happy," Tabler said.
