Strong Production Cannot Overcome Lower Ag Prices

By Linda Breazeale
MSU Ag Communications

Mississippi's top two agricultural commodities -- poultry and forestry -- maintained their strength in 2013, but most agronomic crop values took a hit from significantly lower prices than those earned in 2012.

John Michael Riley, agricultural economist with the Mississippi State University Extension Service, said agronomic crop prices were a major drag in the state's total agricultural commodity value despite good-to-great production levels.

"In 2012, when most of the nation's farmland was experiencing a major drought, Mississippi farmers were able to produce very good yields," he said. "While yields were down across the country, our growers were able to capitalize on the higher prices."

For perspective, Riley has charted out estimated agricultural commodity values for 2013 compared to the previous year and the five-year average. The estimated $7.35 billion is 4 percent less than 2012's total value, but 11 percent more than the five-year average.

Poultry and forestry...

"The total decline in value would have been greater if poultry and forestry had not showed as much improvement from one year to the next," he said. "2012 was more of an anomaly with respect to crops."

Poultry, the state's No. 1 agricultural commodity, is estimated at $2.7 billion, which is 10 percent more than in 2012 and 13 percent more than the five-year average. Forestry, the state's No. 2 crop, is valued at $1.17 billion, an increase of almost 15 percent from 2012 and 17 percent above the five-year average.

Perspective...

"The five-year average is also a good gauge of the industries that are on the rise as well as those that are declining," he said.

Riley said drastic differences from one year to the next can be due to factors out of the control of industry participants, especially in agricultural production.

"Comparisons to the five-year average provide better context with respect to an industry's general direction, as can be seen in values for the state's No. 3 and 4 crops: soybeans and corn," he said.

The soybean value is estimated at $993 million, down 21 percent from 2012 but up 14 percent on the five-year average. Soybean yields averaged 43 bushels per acre, just below the previous year's record of 45 bushels per acre. Corn, which set a new record with 180 bushels per acre, has an estimated value of $631 million, down 31 percent from 2012 but up 18 percent on the five-year average.

Some of the biggest value reductions over the last five years include a 26 percent decline in rice, a 21 percent decline in cotton lint and a 12 percent decline in catfish. In addition to poultry, forestry and corn, the largest trending increases in the state's main crops include 30 percent in livestock and 25 percent in hay.

Rice...

Tim Walker, rice specialist at MSU's Delta Research and Extension Center in Stoneville, said Mississippi growers started reducing their acreage from the 20-year average in 2011, but 2013 was an excellent year for rice. The rice value estimate was $141 million.

"Growers planted just a few thousand acres less than the year before, but our final average yields should be a state record," he said. "2012's average was 7,200 pounds per acre, and we should have at least 7,500 pounds per acre in 2013. We are down significantly on the five-year average value because of how many more acres we used to plant. In recent years, we have planted about 50 percent of the typical acreage."

Walker said two strong years will motivate growers to expand rice acres in 2014. Mississippi farmers could plant nearly 200,000 acres in rice, compared with 130,000 acres in 2013.

Cotton...

Another crop expected to post record yields in 2013 and gain ground in 2014 is cotton. Each positive factor comes after years of reduced acres. Mississippi growers planted nearly a million or significantly more acres of cotton each year until 2007. In 2013, the state harvested 295,000 acres. Cotton lint was estimated at about $262 million and cotton seed at about $69 million, for a total value of $331 million.

"We just harvested 1,188 pounds of cotton per acre, beating our previous yield record of 1,024 pounds per acre in 2004," said Darrin Dodds, Extension cotton specialist.

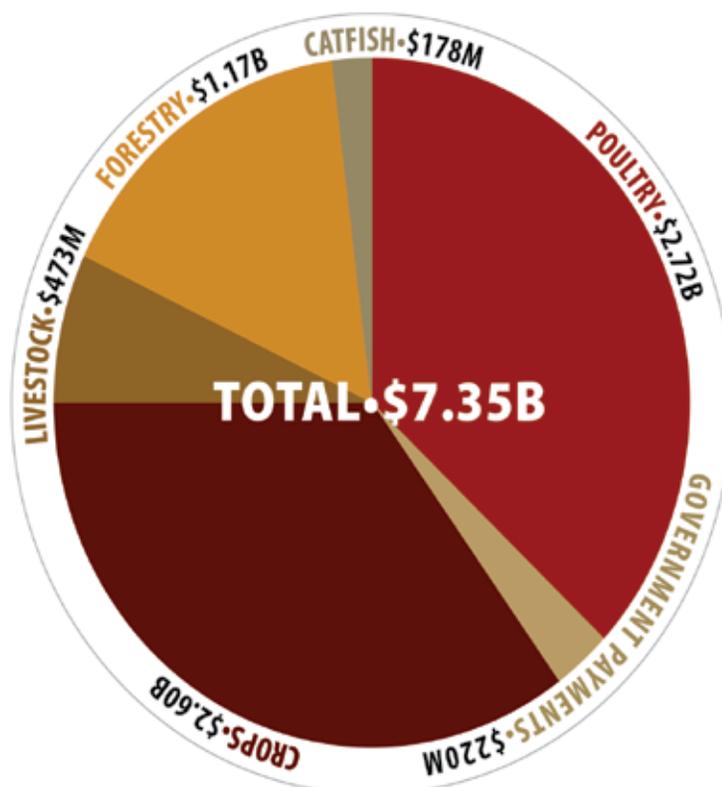

"We got a late start with a long, cold and wet spring, but then the weather provided just what the crop needed," he said. "It was warm during the summer but not oppressively hot, especially at night. The hottest weeks of the year were late in the summer when it needed to finish out the late crop. We also got some timely rains."

Catfish...

Jimmy Avery, Extension aquaculture specialist and director of the Southern Regional Aquaculture Center in Stoneville, said U.S. catfish processing numbers are projected to be up about 10 percent from 2012. This is the first significant increase in production since 2002. He said the recent trend of reducing pond acreage appears to be near its conclusion.

Lower Ag Prices

“We lost about 2,600 acres from 2012 to 2013. Most of those ponds were used for fingerlings, leaving a larger percentage of food fish acreage for 2013,” he said. “That change could eventually result in a shortage of stocker fish.”

Avery said some consumers chose cheaper foreign imports in 2011, when catfish supplies were tight and retail prices of catfish increased about 50 percent. The shortage peaked in late 2011 and early 2012.

“Now that our supply has stabilized and more consumers are requesting U.S. products, our markets are returning,” he said. “Farmers are finding a way to intensify production and be more efficient. They are ending the year much more optimistic about profit potential in 2014.”

The 2013 crop value estimate placed catfish, the state’s No. 7 crop, at $178 million.

Livestock...

Riley said the improvement in livestock’s value from recent years can be attributed to significant increases in hogs and moderate improvement in cattle, both offsetting decreases in dairy. The agricultural economist estimated hog values to be 66 percent higher than the five-year average. Individual livestock values for 2013 are $289 million for cattle and calves, $144 million for hogs and $40 million for dairy.

“The U.S. Department of Agriculture showed a significant increase in the state’s sow numbers in 2012, but the bulk of that increase did not start producing litters until 2013, causing the jump in production,” Riley said. “Beef cattle declined a bit due to smaller numbers, mostly feeder cattle of which we saw a significant increase in 2012 due to drought in other parts of the U.S. The dairy industry continued to decline and is off the five-year average by 11 percent.”

Hay...

Mississippi posted another strong year of forage production, and the estimated value of hay for 2013 is $157 million. That total for the state’s No. 8 crop is 15 percent more than in the previous year and 25 percent better than the five-year average.

Other 2013 crop values and their percentage changes from the five-year averages included wheat at $126 million, up 24 percent; specialty crops at $115 million, up 23 percent; sweet potatoes at $69 million, up 17 percent; peanuts at $23 million, down 11 percent; and grain sorghum at $12 million, down 11 percent.

The report also factored government payments into the state’s agricultural value. For 2013, the state’s farmers received $220 million, which was close to the amount received in the previous year. The total is 28 percent less than the five-year average.

“Most prices are above the levels set in the 2008 Farm Bill, so there are fewer payments needing to be paid to farmers,” Riley said. “Most of this was related to direct payments, which will be phased out in the upcoming bill, and subsidies on crop insurance premiums.”

How Does Jello-O Work?

By Lise Foy, Director
MS Agriculture & Forestry Museum

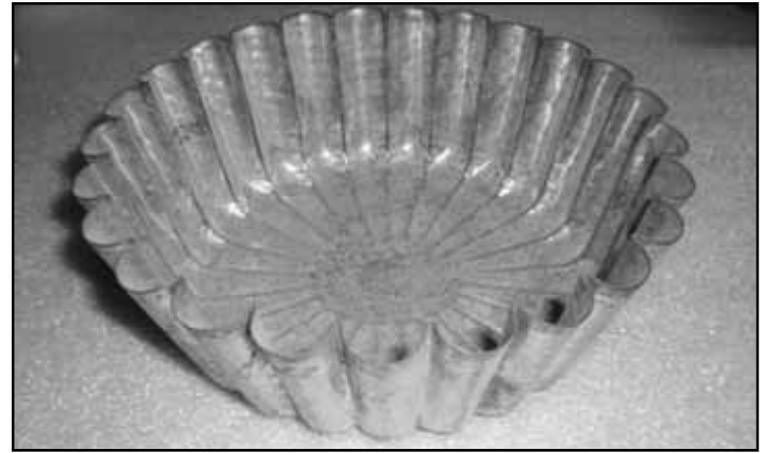

When I lived in Greenwood, I belonged to the Greenwood Garden Club. What an honor for this Mississippi Hill Country raised girl to have been invited to join this group of Delta Ladies as they studied floral design and learned about gardening techniques while they partook of refreshments served on china plates at their monthly meetings. Luckily for me, my sweet mother, who is from Greenwood herself, managed to squeeze in some etiquette and protocol training between my 'jumping out of the barn loft' and 'throwing cow-patty' type activities with my older brothers.

However, there was one thing we were served at a Garden Club meeting that Momma didn't cover. At first glance, I thought gelatin dessert mold. But, with closer inspection of this red jelly, I saw that it was not clear red like cherry or strawberry Jell-O. It looked more like solid V-8 juice, and was topped with onions and celery and served with a side of cheese straws. So, practicing my skills of politely taking one bite, I discover it is tomato flavored Jell-O? Quietly, to one of my best friends, who is much more versed in Delta cuisine and also a sustaining member of the club, I ask, 'what is this stuff?' 'Oh, that's tomato aspic,' she says. After a nod of my head and making out that I knew exactly what that meant, I promptly looked that up after the meeting.

Aspic is a dish in which savory ingredients are set into a gelatin. Gelatin can come from the collagen in cow or pig bones, hides and connective tissues. Gelatin used in some aspic recipes is made from a meat stock. Nearly any type of meat can be used to make the gelatin: pork, beef, veal, chicken, turkey, or fish. The stock can be clarified with egg whites and flavored before the aspic sets or congeals.

The collagen used in making Jell-O is sent through a manufacturing process where it is ground into a fine dried powder at the final step. The chemical reaction that occurs when you dissolve the gelatin powder in hot water creates bonds between the amino acids that float loosely in the liquid state. The bonds become more secure trapping the water as the gelatin cools so the Jell-O jiggles when you shake it. If you heat it, the bonds break and become liquid again.

On display in the Heritage Center Gallery at the Ag Museum are three gelatin or aspic molds. These molds are part of the Lifestyle Exhibit which portrays conveniences brought about in the 1930's with the introduction of electricity and mechanization. Some of the labor-saving devices displayed include can openers, fruit peelers, canning equipment, and sewing machines. Jell-O molds became wildly popular with the introduction of the electric refrigerator, as house-wives could show off to friends.

The success story of Jell-O is the result of advertising and merchandising methods, new and different, never before employed. Salesmen, well-trained, well groomed, well versed in the art of selling went out to fairs, country gatherings, church socials, and parties to advertise their product, according to the history of Jell-O at www.jellogallery.org. Distribution of recipes and samples began around 1904. You would have found Jell-O for sale in a General Store like the one in Small Town, Mississippi located at the Ag Museum.

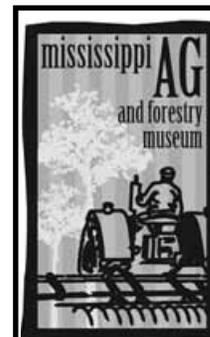

The Ag Museum is full of teaching tools and resources that teachers can use to help students learn about where food comes from and how agriculture touches our lives daily. Our newly developed teacher's resource guide includes goals and objectives and list of competencies from the State of Mississippi's Social Studies Curriculum that can be covered during a visit to the museum. Our lesson plans also follow National Core Curriculum standards, so the visit can be most beneficial for students.

One of the activities is titled 'A Day in the Life without Agriculture'. Think of all the ways in which agriculture touches your life. Just imagine a day without agriculture. Do you think you could survive? You certainly wouldn't have Jell-O!

The Ag Museum is located at 1150 Lakeland Drive in Jackson and is open Tuesday through Saturday from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. In addition to our gallery and exhibit spaces, the Ag Museum also has room for your event, whether it's a meeting, a wedding or other special event. Call (601) 432-4500 for information.

Poultry Remains No. 1 For 19th Straight Year

By Susan Collins-Smith
MSU Ag Communications

prices that are in line with profitability.

"Sanderson Farms is building a brand new facility in Texas. They are putting in an entire operation, including a feed mill, hatchery, growing houses and a processing plant. Other companies aren't that ambitious, but some have added 10, maybe 12 houses," he said.

Poultry producers also may see an increase in demand at the grocery store, Riley said, as beef and pork producers face challenges that will likely decrease production.

Nationally, Mississippi ranks fifth behind Georgia, Arkansas, Alabama and North Carolina in poultry production.

According to the most recent data from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Mississippi producers placed approximately 548.9 million chicks through mid-September. That is a 2 percent decrease from one year ago. Table egg production rose to about 255 million through July, a 4 percent increase since 2012.

Forestry, with a total estimated value of $1.17 billion, ranked No. 2 in the state. The current total estimated 2013 year-end value of all commodities is $7.35 billion. Final figures will be determined in February.

Poultry ranked No. 1 among Mississippi's commodities for the 19th straight year, with a preliminary estimated value of $2.7 billion.

The total estimated value of poultry increased by about 10 percent from 2012. Broilers gained about 10 percent in value. Eggs and chickens saw a gain of 4.5 percent and 6.6 percent, respectively.

John Michael Riley, agricultural economist with Mississippi State University's Extension Service, said the rise in values is largely attributed to higher bird prices because production is mostly steady with 2012.

"High feed costs dampened placements of eggs and chicks in the beginning of the year, which had overall broiler production falling," Riley said. "But from July forward, corn production was good, allowing producers to increase their placements a little and offset the declines from early in the year."

Tom Tabler, Extension professor in the Department of Poultry Science at MSU, said feed prices fell by about half throughout 2013, giving producers a little relief.

"In 2012, producers were paying about $8 per bushel for corn," he said. "Now the price has fallen to $4.50 per bushel. That has helped a lot."

Producers have had a good year overall with few external pressures.

"This summer was not terribly hot, which was less stressful on the birds and kept down the cost of cooling the chicken houses," Tabler said. "This winter could be a different situation, though. It is somewhat colder than it usually is this time of year. If we experience a colder-than-normal winter, that will mean higher heating costs for producers."

Tabler said the industry has experienced overall growth during 2013. He sees signs that the industry is confident going into 2014.

"There has been a slight expansion of the industry, not just in Mississippi, but across the country," Tabler said. "Producers have seen fairly good market prices and feed

2013 Forest Products Values Improve, Gain Momentum

By Keri Collins Lewis
MSU Ag Communications

Mississippi's forest products bounced back into the No. 2 spot in the state's list of agricultural commodities based on annual production values.

James Henderson, associate Extension professor in the Mississippi State University College of Forest Resources, estimated the state's forest products 2013 harvest value to be $1.17 billion, compared to the 2012 value of $1.02 billion. That is a 14.6 percent increase over the 2012 harvest. Final figures will be available in February.

Notably, the 2013 harvest value is 34.9 percent higher than the 2009 harvest value of $864.9 million, which was the lowest valued harvest year since the recession of 2007 to 2009.

"The increase can be attributed to several factors, including an increase in timber harvesting because of slightly higher prices," Henderson said. "Severance taxes collected on timber sales are up 4.4 percent as of October, compared to the same period for 2012."

Henderson reported stumpage for pine pulpwood is up 19.9 percent, hardwood pulpwood is up 32.6 percent, pine sawtimber is up 4.2 percent, oak sawtimber is up 11.6 percent and mixed hardwood sawtimber is up 11.6 percent.

The demand for Mississippi's forest products is tied to the U.S. housing market, especially new home construction. Though the recent spike in mortgage interest rates cooled the housing market somewhat, Henderson expects continued growth in the housing market and the overall economy.

"The trend remains positive -- housing starts are 19 percent higher than this time in 2012," he said.

Existing and new home sales are also on an upward trend. Compared to the end of 2012, existing home sales are up 11 percent and new home sales are up 13 percent.

With inventories of homes for sale still below those typically found in a healthy housing market, new home construction is expected to increase in 2014.

Henderson said the closure of the International Paper mill in Courtland, Alabama has implications for the pulpwood market in north Mississippi.

"Given the capacity of the International Paper mill, demand in part of north Mississippi probably will be cut by at least half," Henderson said.

David Jones, forest products specialist with the MSU Extension Service and associate professor in the MSU Forest and Wildlife Research Center's Department of Sustainable Bioproducts, said he expects 2014 to be on par with 2013.

"2013 has been good for forest products, an upswing year, and I expect to see a continual increase in the state's lumber production," Jones said. "We had a couple of mills close, but one is scheduled to reopen in 2014 after a change in ownership."

The biofuels industry remains an unknown factor.

"No one is sure what the impact of the biofuels industry will be, other than the creation of some additional jobs," Jones said. "A couple of biofuels companies are entering the market in the state, and they started construction and research in 2013. They may be up and operating by mid-2014."

An increase in domestic demand fueled the industry in 2013, while the export market remained stable. Jones said most of the export growth has been in the Asian markets.

"We sold some logs to China early in 2013, but it's not as big of a market for us as for the West Coast because of transportation costs," he said. "Many Asian countries are starting to use more wood in their construction practices, so we may see more growth in that sector."

As with other agricultural products, weather will determine the next few months' activity.

"Mills are keeping appropriate amounts of inventory in stock now, but we could see a repeat of what happened in early 2013, when it was too wet for loggers to get trees out of the woods and sawmills had to shut down," Jones said. "So we'll be watching the weather to see if the hardwood mills can sustain lumber production through the winter."

Forest products have been listed in the top three most valuable agricultural commodities in the state for more than 25 years. This year forest products are second only to the poultry industry's $2.72 billion predicted year-end value.
