Introducing Horses to Spring Growing Pastures

By Penn State Extension Office

Horse owners are anticipating the joy of realizing that the long harsh winter is gradually changing into the pleasures of spring. The problem for the horse owner is the challenge of controlling the amount of consumption of the green grass when returning the horse to grazing. When the horse's metabolism is not accustomed to the lush forage dramatic, side effects can occur.

Along with the warmer temperatures, changes occur to the condition of the pastures where grasses turn to a greener appearance and will contain healthy nutritional value for the grazing horse.

It won't be long until the sound of lawnmowers will be abundant and farmers will be processing the first cutting of hay.

Horses Confined During Winter Months

During the winter months and times of inclement weather, domestic horses are often confined in areas where they cannot access natural forage on a day to day basis.

Most horse owners that have pastures for their horses tend to restrict the horse in winter from the pasture to protect the pasture from the damage a horse can inflict. Horses are destructive on wet pastures often ripping with their teeth the forage by the roots or causing extensive damage to the sod, by churning and forming rivets with their hoofs.

A horse owner who wishes to provide the supplement a pasture can provide to the horse's diet must make a concentrated effort in maintaining a healthy pasture year round. These owners often have sacrifice or dry-lot areas for the horse's daily exercise and turn out during inclement weather and the long months of winter.

Problems Associated with Introducing Horses in the Spring to Growing Pastures

A problem can occur with the acclimation of horses to forage when spring arrives and the horses are introduced to a diet of green grasses.

Horses are a grazing animal that prefer to supply the nutrients and fiber needed in their system by eating natural pasture forage. A good healthy well-maintained pasture might provide all the necessary forage a horse needs in its diet.

The horse's digestive system does not adjust to changes rapidly or easily. Horses fed erratically in both amounts and types of digestible items tend to develop problems that can occur in the consequence of colic or founder. A horse not use to eating apples can develop colic if suddenly a bag of apples is consumed.

Innocent people think they are giving the horse a treat when they feed them large amounts of carrots or throw the fresh lawn clippings over the fence for the horse to chomp on; when actually they could be causing a harmful chain reaction.

Introducing Horses to Grazing

One method of gradually introducing the horse to grass is to begin with small controlled periods of grazing of 15 minutes a day for a few days.

Increase in the following days an additional ten minutes each turn out until the horse has adjusted to a three or four hour period of grazing time.

Then maintain this four hour period of grazing for a two week period before giving the horse total turnout on the pasture. This will enable the horse's digestive system to accept the digestion of the fresh grass.

Even with the most careful management of horse forage consumption, ill effects can occur.

Notice What the Horse Consumes

The actual horse owner or a well wishing bystander should always take notice of what is fed to the horse. If you don't own the horse, ask for permission before you offer, what you think are treats.

Avoid letting horses consume other livestock's processed feeds or silage. Even different types of forage plants can disrupt the digestive system of the horse. Consult with a veterinarian or a horse nutritionist when considering changes in the horse's diet.

For more information on managing the introduction to your horse to spring forage, contact your local County Extension Office.

Fencing Options: Using Temporary Fencing for Horses

By Samuel Roberts Noble Foundation

Many fencing options are available to horse owners, from electric wire, vinyl and/or wood rail to high tensile. It all depends upon what you would like to accomplish. Do you need temporary fencing for pasture rotation and/or for a short-term containment situation? Do you want a permanent installation, such as vinyl and/or wood posts and railings or T-posts?

The right design for your fence depends on the type of horses or livestock, the purpose of the fencing, and the size of the area to be fenced.

If you have a horse who has been laid up on stall rest for an extended period of time, you will have to introduce them back into a grazing situation slowly over a long period of time. In this case, you do not want to go with any type of fencing that they can easily escape from. Purchasing portable corral panels to make a round pen are ideal in this situation.

Electric fencing is ideal for quick and efficient installation of a temporary fence, such as for controlled grazing and pasture management. Choices of electrical wire or tape include at least four types: steel wire, poly wire, poly tape and poly equine rope. For horse owners, the half-inch or 1.5-inch poly tape is highly visible and easy to install, as are the other types. Generally, the wider type is used at the top of the post with the narrower width for a second strand.

No matter what type of fence you choose, it should be tall enough to discourage and prevent any livestock from trying to jump over it. Remember that the grass is always greener on the other side, and livestock have 24 hours in a day to try to figure out a way to get out. It is our job to keep them in.

Raising the Barn

By Lise Foy, Director
MS Agriculture & Forestry Museum

Barn raising, also historically called a “raising bee”, is a term for the building or re-building of a barn by members of a community. The practice was particularly common in rural America in the 18th and 19th century.

A barn was a necessary structure for a farmer for storage of grain, hay and keeping animals. But, building a barn was a costly project that required more labor than the average farmer had available. The practice of barn raising by a community solved the need for labor to build the large structures, and neighbors helped each other, returning the favor when others needed help with their barn.

A large amount of preparation was required before the one to two day project of raising a barn. Lumber and hardware were laid in, plans were made, ground was cleared, and tradesmen were hired. Materials were purchased or traded for by the family who would own the barn once it was complete.

Generally, participation was mandatory for community members. All able-bodied members of the community were expected to attend, and failure to attend a barn raising without a really good reason could lead to excommunication within the community. In other words, you better show up if you expect to get some help at your farm when the time comes.

People with prior experience or with specific skills might be chosen to lead the project, and older people who had participated in many barn raisings would serve as crew chiefs. Generally speaking, the affair would be well organized, with meals planned and provided, work crews assigned, and child care handled.

Most barn raisings were accomplished in June and July between planting season and harvest season. The framing materials were produced in the winter, including harvesting of trees, hand hewing of logs, or transport to the sawmill to cut lumber.

The barn raising tradition included a topping out celebration, where a wreath or flag was at the high point of the frame after the last nail was hammered into place. The master carpenter might also make a speech and a toast.

Barn raisings happened in a social structure with a good deal of interdependence. Members of rural communities were often related to each other. They traded with each other, buying and selling land, labor, seed, cattle, and other necessary commodities. They worshipped together. They celebrated together. Despite traditions of independence, self-sufficiency, and refusal to incur debt to one another, community barn raisings were a part of life.

The Ag Museum lost its barn, along with the maintenance shop and veterinary infirmary, in the fire on November 13, 2014. Plans for our re-build are underway, as well as continuing efforts toward the master plan renovations which began in 2013. We have some real and some figurative ‘barn raising’ to do for sure!

On April 23, the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus will bring their Built to Amaze show to the Ag Museum over the lunch hour. The ring master himself will present Commissioner Cindy Hyde-Smith with a golden hard hat as we embark on the greatest Barn Raising our community has seen in a long time. Please join us for this special announcement and some popcorn while you enjoy the circus at the Ag Museum!

Southern AgCredit is sponsoring the first annual Raising the Barn benefit to kick start the fundraising efforts to rebuild and improve our facility, a facility that belongs to the people of Mississippi. The event will take place on Friday, June 12.

The day will begin with the Mississippi Ag & Forestry Expo starting at 8:00 a.m. The Expo includes speakers provided by MSU Extension, with topics including wild hog control, summer food plots, non-native species control, gardening, and agritourism; a farmer’s market and trade show on Main Street in Small Town; live tractor demonstrations provided by Mississippi Ag; and farm safety demonstrations provided by Mississippi Farm Bureau.

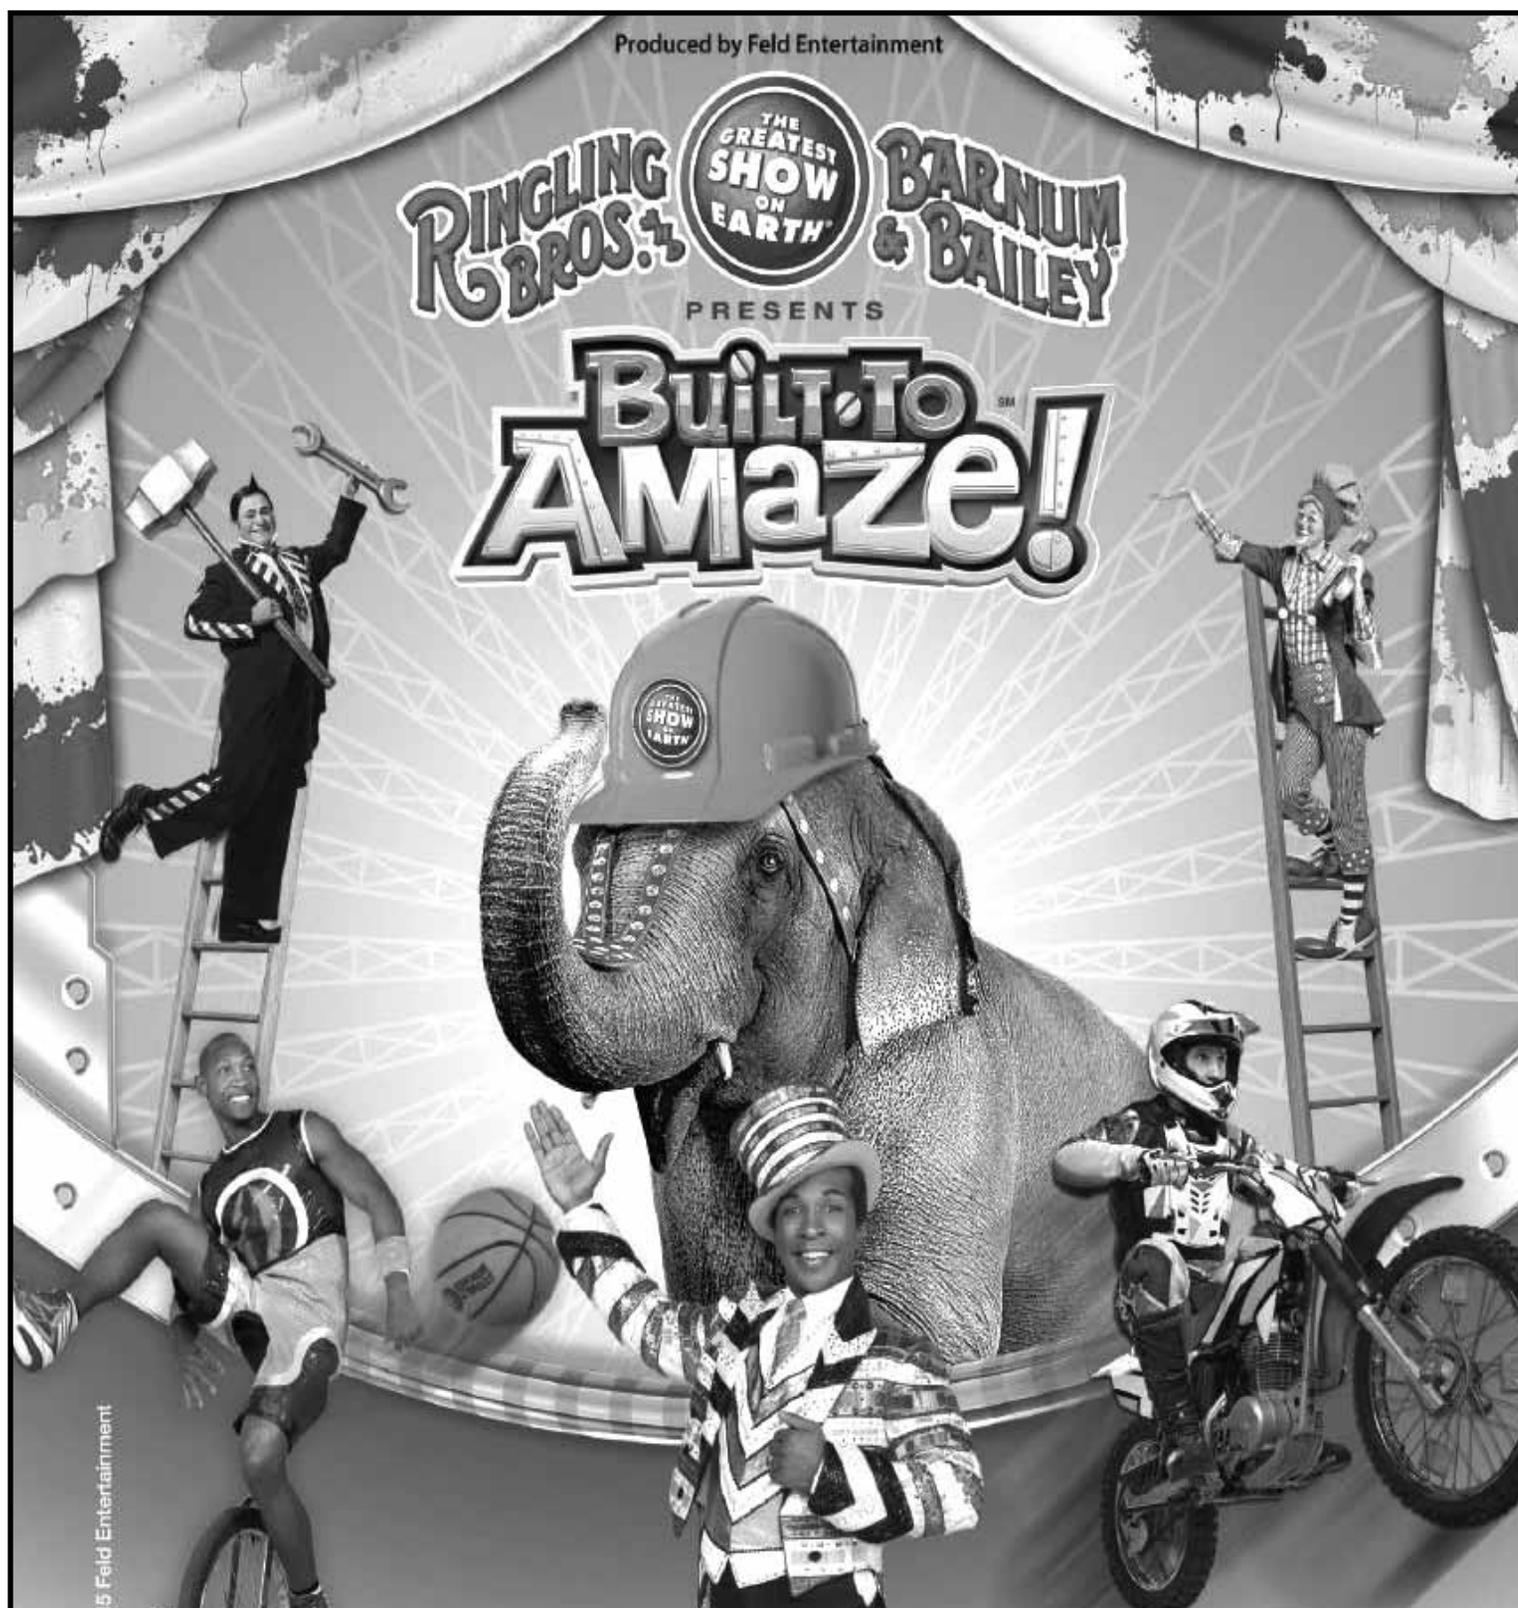

Friday night, beginning at 6:00 p.m., the Raising the Barn outdoor concert will feature Nashville-based Black Lilies along with local bands including Southern Grass. Food trucks and beer garden will be available. Admission is $10.00 for adults and $1.00 for children 12 and under. Bring your picnic blanket or lawn chair, (no coolers please) and enjoy the evening with us as you help us ‘raise the barn.’ All funds raised will be donated to the Mississippi Agriculture & Forestry Museum Foundation. Corporate sponsorships are available. Email lise@mdac.ms.gov for information.

Just like an old fashioned barn raising depended on the community, the Ag Museum needs some help. We need your help. Of course we won’t excommunicate you if you don’t come, but we sure would like to see you at this good old fashioned community gathering.

Unplug and rediscover real fun at the Mississippi Ag Museum!

The Ag Museum is located at 1150 Lakeland Drive in Jackson and is open Monday through Saturday from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. In addition to our gallery and exhibit spaces, the Ag Museum also has room for your event, whether it’s a meeting, a wedding or other special event. Call (601) 432-4500 for information.

If you would like to make a donation, make checks payable to the Mississippi Agriculture Museum Foundation, 1150 Lakeland Drive, Jackson, MS 39216.

The Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus will be at the Mississippi Coliseum Thursday thru Sunday, April 23-26. During their visit to the capital city, they will also bring a sample of their Built to Amaze show to the Ag Museum on April 23.

Advertising Guidelines

The Mississippi Market Bulletin is published on the 1st and 15th of each month by the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce. The Mississippi Market Bulletin is an important way for the Department to disseminate news and information about issues affecting Mississippi's agriculture industry and the Department's operations.

Through its classified advertising section, the Bulletin provides a forum for Mississippi residents to buy and sell agricultural related items while also giving statewide exposure to small farmers who might not normally have the economic resources for such widespread advertising. The Bulletin does not publish commercial or display ads and all items offered for sale must have been produced, raised, grown or operated on the seller's property. Businesses, corporations, dealerships, brokers or other commercial enterprises are not allowed to advertise in the Mississippi Market Bulletin.

Advertising rules and guidelines have been established for the Mississippi Market Bulletin in order to comply with regulations enforced by the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce and to maintain the objectives of the publication. To place an ad, you must include your name, mailing address and account number that the subscription is listed under on each ad that you submit (this information will not be printed). Each subscriber is allowed to advertise two ads in the Bulletin, listing one ad per category.
- All listings must be agriculture related (raised, grown, produced or operated on your farm). At the top of your ad, write the category that the ad should be listed under. We reserve the right to edit, revise or reject each ad. Please print or type your ad.
- There is a 30-word limit for classified advertisements, this includes: price (on the item you are selling), your city, county and telephone number or name and complete address must be included in the ad if you do not list a telephone number. Ads cannot be held over from one issue to another. You must submit them for each issue.
- Out-of-state residents are not eligible to advertise with the following exceptions: Out-of-state ads are allowed in the "Wanting To Buy" category. Out-of-state ads are allowed for individuals owning farm property within the state that is being offered for sale (consisting of 10 acres or more).

Rabbits Signal Spring and Potential Garden Woes

By Jessica Tegt
Wildlife Extension Professor
Department of Wildlife,
Fisheries and Aquaculture - MSU

With garden season quickly approaching, there is no better time to discuss Mississippi's resident rabbit, the eastern cottontail.

Many people think rabbits are a type of rodent because they have a tooth structure similar to that seen in squirrels, rats and mice. They also have a tendency to gnaw on plants, wood and other structures. However, rabbits are classified as lagomorphs because they have two pairs of upper and lower front teeth, and their food goes through a double-digestion process.

Cottontails' preferred habitat is in areas with woody and dense vegetation. They seek shelter in holes and dense shrubs, as well as under buildings and piles of brush. They are common in urban, suburban and rural areas where abundant food and shelter are available. Cottontails found in rural areas spend their entire lives on a few acres of land.

In urban areas, rabbits may not venture far from a single backyard. Although rabbits can cause property damage, they fill an ecological niche as prey for other wildlife, including coyotes, fox, bobcats, eagles and hawks.

The breeding period for rabbits occurs from February through August. During this time, rabbits can bear between two and six kindles of kits with an average litter of three to five young. As an adaptation to their high death rates, cottontails can breed immediately after giving birth. Female cottontails form cup-shaped nests lined with fur under bushes or in tall grass where their young can remain hidden.

Lagomorphs in general are known for their inattentive parenting, visiting their young sometimes only once a day to nurse. However, female rabbits rarely abandon nests. If you suspect a nest has been abandoned, the best things to do are avoid disturbing it and keep domestic animals away. Chances are that the mother will return to care for the kits at a safe time.

It is also important to note that baby rabbits grow quickly and are able to leave the nest as early as 14 days after birth. They typically are weaned in less than one month and are completely independent of their mothers in eight weeks.

Although rabbits can cause damage any time of the year, spring is the most common time for homeowners to notice substantial losses. This is because rabbits prefer young, growing vegetation, such as tulips, garden vegetables, clover and turf grass. They also eat new shoots in crop fields and can cause losses for farmers.

In winter, rabbits gnaw through the bark of young trees and eat the cambium, or inner bark layer, which can significantly damage or even kill the tree. Homeowners will notice rabbit tracks and droppings near areas where damage occurs, as well as irregular gnawing on trees and roots. Unlike squirrels and deer, which leave jagged edges on stems when eating plants, rabbits will nip stems cleanly at a 45-degree angle.

In addition to damaging plants, rabbits can harbor diseases that affect human and pet health. Tularemia is the most significant disease associated with rabbits. Tularemia is caused by bacteria that can be contracted by humans through the bite of a rabbit, tick or flea, or by handling the carcass of an infected animal.

Tularemia symptoms in humans include fever, swollen lymph nodes and swelling around the bite, typically appearing within three to 14 days of exposure. Rarely is the infection fatal to humans, provided they receive antibiotics quickly. To reduce the risk of contracting tularemia, avoid direct contact with rabbits that are found dead or emaciated, as well as those that exhibit abnormal behavior, such as lethargy and lameness. Take precautions and wear latex or vinyl gloves when handling and butchering rabbits.

Like most mammals, rabbits can carry ticks infected with other diseases, such as Lyme disease. Since these diseases typically manifest themselves with flu-like symptoms, consider a tick-borne illness if anyone has symptoms within three weeks of being outdoors or handling rabbits.

Exclusion is the best and least expensive method for preventing rabbits from entering a garden or eating shrubbery. Poultry netting is inexpensive and particularly effective when installed as a 2-foot-tall fence around a garden or flowerbed. Netting also can be easily wrapped around the trunks of young trees.

In agricultural areas or at nurseries and tree farms, a double-strand electric fence is most effective when placed at heights of 5 and 10 inches above the ground. It is important to keep vegetation clear of the electric fence in order to maintain effectiveness. You can deter rabbits from nesting on property by securing wire mesh under sheds and decks.

By keeping grass mowed and removing brush piles and tall weeds, you can cut down on natural spots for rabbits to raise young. Homeowners could also discourage rabbits from damaging plants by planting less preferred species of vegetation and trees. Rabbits, like many herbivores, avoid plants with strong aromas, such as walnut and spruce. Plants with thorns or dense, hairy stems also deter them.

Rabbit hunting is a good source of recreation that can also help control rabbit populations. Visit the webpage for the Mississippi Department of Wildlife, Fisheries, and Parks for rabbit-hunting rules and regulations, and always obey firearm regulations in any area where you plan to hunt at <http://www.mdwfp.com/>.

Avoid 'Crape Murder' With Limited Pruning

By Bonnie Coblentz
MSU Ag Communications

Efforts to prevent people from committing "crape murder" are reducing the number of unsightly, knobby-knuckled branch ends but may leave people wondering how to correctly shape crape myrtles.

Gary Bachman, a horticulturist with the Mississippi State University Extension Service and Mississippi Agricultural and Forestry Experiment Station, said many crape myrtles are pruned back to the same spot every year. This causes the cut ends to swell into a fist-like shape. Bachman works from the MSU Coastal Research and Extension Center in Biloxi.

"Homeowners see professional landscape maintenance people do that and think they're supposed to cut their crape myrtles back like that," Bachman said. "It's really the result of folks wanting a certain size plant, so they're pruning it back to the same spot because they know at the end of summer, the plant will be only so big."

Bachman, who hosts Southern Gardening on television and radio and writes a newspaper column by the same name, said the problem comes down to the fact that the wrong crape myrtle variety is growing in that spot.

"Find a species with different growing characteristics and use it there," Bachman said. "For example, people love a white crape myrtle. Natchez is a very popular variety people choose, but it's a 30-foot tree if you let it go. When people try to use it in their landscapes, it's often too large for the space that they have."

"A more appropriate tree would be an Acoma crape, which is also white, but it only gets to about 10 feet high at the most," he said.

Crape myrtles are resilient trees and grow back from just about any pruning given to them in the spring. By summer, they are full of new growth and blooms, but in the winter when the leaves have fallen, the damaged ends are visible.

Those who have crape myrtles with damaged ends can overcome them in time. Bachman said to let the tree grow unpruned one year, then prune it back the next year at a point past the trouble spot. Crape myrtles will bloom in the summer even if they have not been pruned.

Jeff Wilson, Extension regional horticulture specialist working from the North Mississippi Research and Extension Center in Verona, said planting a variety that is the right size for the location prevents most pruning.

"Research has shown that if you cut crape myrtles, you do get more blooms," Wilson said. "My experience is that it works best to train the plant with careful, light pruning the first two or three years, and then let it grow. The prettiest crape myrtles are the ones left to grow into their natural shape."

Wilson called correct pruning an art and said any pruning that is done should take into consideration the tree itself and where it is growing. He had encouragement for those who have done it wrong in the past or who have come into possession of crape myrtles that have the unsightly, knotted ends.

"No matter how bad you butcher the crape myrtle, it's going to come back this summer," he said.
