State Ag Values Took a Small Hit in 2015

By Bonnie Coblentz
MSU Extension Service

Neither crop yields nor prices were particularly bad in 2015, but Mississippi's estimated state agricultural production value still dropped to $7.2 billion, a 4.9 percent decrease from the previous year.

Brian Williams, an agricultural economist with the Mississippi State University Extension Service, said the decline in agricultural value has two causes.

"Yields are down nearly across the board from last year's records. It's not that the yields were necessarily bad this year; rather, the bar was set very high last year in terms of yields," he said. "Additionally, most prices are at or below year-ago prices."

Government payments added $199 million to the state's agricultural value. When these funds are included, agriculture brought an estimated $7.4 billion to the state, down just 4.5 percent from 2014.

Poultry and forestry held the state's top two spots, posting values of $3.2 billion and $1.16 billion respectively. Both saw increases this year, with poultry rising an estimated 3.4 percent and forestry jumping an estimated 13.5 percent.

Egg value is the biggest surprise in the year's numbers: Production was up about 5 percent in 2015, but value was up almost 40 percent.

"There was a sharp increase in the value of egg production due to the avian influenza outbreak in Iowa and Minnesota," Williams said.

Williams said the other big winners in Mississippi agriculture were peanuts and sweet potatoes.

"Each of those commodities saw a significant increase in value from a year ago," he said. "Peanut production was much higher than a year ago. Peanuts looked to be more profitable than corn, soybeans and cotton, driving producers to plant more acres."

Peanuts generated an estimated $28.8 million for Mississippi producers.

Jason Sarver, Extension peanut specialist and Mississippi Agricultural and Forestry Experiment Station researcher, said the farm bill provided incentive for new growers to get into peanuts and for existing growers to increase acreage.

"Since the price of other commodities has not come up, I think we will increase peanut acreage again next year," Sarver said. "Although we had some drought issues and tough harvest conditions during the 2015 season, when you put the pencil to the paper, peanuts will still be economically favorable to most other crops entering the 2016 season."

Williams said sweet potatoes are expected to have better prices than a year ago, which boosts the crop's value.

Stephen Meyers, Extension sweet potato specialist, said the crop saw a 12 percent increase in planted acreage over the previous year primarily due to increased demand as per capita consumption continues to rise in the U.S.

"Another reason acreage is up can be attributed to fairly lower row crop prices in 2015," Meyers said. "Many of our growers in Mississippi farm sweet potatoes and row crops, and they opted to plant more sweet potato acreage and less acreage in other crops."

He said there may be another slight bump in planted acres in 2016 because of increased interest in sweet potato production among more traditional row crop producers.

"As long as consumer demand for sweet potatoes domestically and internationally continues to increase, we likely will see some growth in the U.S. sweet potato industry."

Row crop values dropped to $2.06 billion, a 22 percent decline in value from 2014. Williams said low row crop prices may be the new normal.

"We saw very tight margins for most crops this year, and it looks like that will continue into 2016," he said.

Soybean remains the most valuable row crop and the state's No. 3 agricultural commodity, posting a $930 million value in 2015. That value is down 26 percent from the $1.3 billion value the crop posted in 2014.

Corn and cotton were the next most valuable row crops in 2015. Corn dropped 11 percent to a $343 million estimated value, and cotton fell 34 percent to $254 million. Rice had a 2015 estimated value of $132 million, down 28 percent.

"Cotton's decline is driven primarily by lower production, while soybean production is only slightly lower than a year ago, but prices are more than $2.20 per bushel lower," Williams said. "Corn production is expected to be equal to last year, but prices are about $.50 lower than a year ago."

Williams said rice production and prices are quite a bit lower than a year ago. Wheat lost more than half its value and fell to $32 million, a drop driven by a combination of significantly reduced acreage and lower prices. One bright spot was grain sorghum's 8.4 percent increase to an estimated value of $38.5 million in 2015.

Specialty crops saw little change, dropping just an estimated 1.1 percent to a 2015 value of $112 million. Hay dropped 5.1 percent to a $105 million estimated value.

Row crops were not the only big losers this year in Mississippi agriculture. Markets were not favorable for dairy, and milk declined about 37 percent from 2014 levels to an estimated value of $31.7 million.

Cattle and calves rose slightly to $448 million, a 1.4 percent increase from 2014. Catfish held fairly steady in 2015 with an estimated value of $185 million, down just 2.3 percent from the previous year. Hogs dropped 14 percent in value to an estimated $100 million.

A New Way to Travel

By Lise Foy
Contributing Writer

I am writing this as I begin a 1,200 mile trip across our great country from Mississippi to Wyoming. It is a journey I've made many times in the last forty years. The first time, I was a child, maybe ten or eleven, and it was our summer family vacation. Our family of five was on the road for around three weeks and camped in the luxury of a pop-up camper in Yellowstone and Grand Teton National Parks.

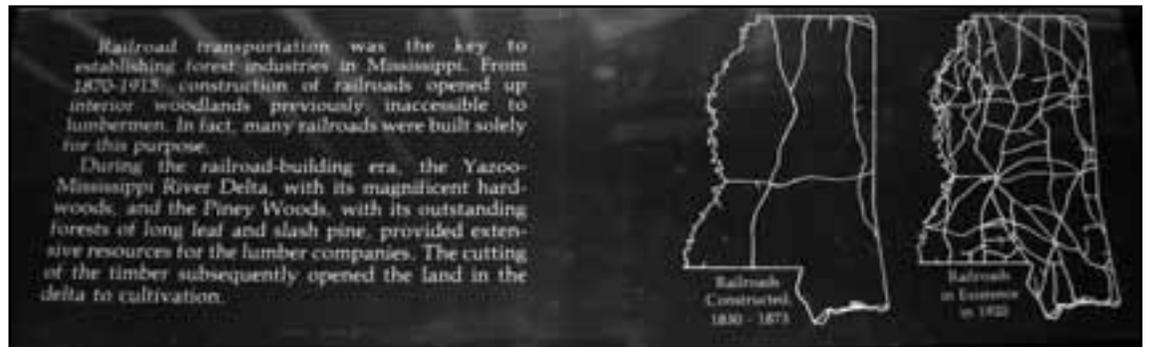

Several years later, my husband and I made the trip with all of our earthly belongings in tow, including two horses he pulled, while I followed in the U-Haul pulling my truck and our dog, who rode on the dashboard the whole way. I am sure we were an interesting looking bunch as we rolled up to the Big Horn Mountains to "stay a spell." That was in October of 2000. We stayed six years before we hauled it all back to Mississippi because we could not get our family to move up there with us. The two of us have made many treks back and forth over those years and since then, usually always driving, sometimes together and sometimes separately.

Of the many road trips to our second home state, this one, however, might be the biggest adventure of them all. We have two additional two-year-old people with us who have never seen those mountains or snow that is piled feet high. It strikes me now just how brave my parents were to take me and my two brothers on that aforementioned first trip, living in what amounted to a rolling tent for nearly a month.

As this is a new year, it is always fun to reflect back on the year that has past, but I like to think farther back. One hundred years is much more interesting because there are larger changes to consider. So, I'm thinking about travel and commerce in 1916. People did not just jump in their crew cab pick-ups with two car seats in the back loaded down with Cheerio snack cups and a DVD player to drive 70 miles an hour (at least) on the interstate. My husband, assisting with my thoughts on this topic, thinks there must have been herds of wild children turned loose on the American prairie because those parents surely could not have handled the crying and temper fits and manage the horses, wagon, cooking breakfast on a fire, and looking out for whatever dangers might be on the trail ahead. Well, by 1916, they had automobiles and trains, I muse as we make our second rest stop in our first hour of travel. Yes, I would say that travel and shipping of goods has changed a bit in one hundred years.

The Heritage Center Gallery at the Ag Museum displays the story

The "rail era," displayed in the Heritage Center Gallery at the Ag Museum covers the period of time between 1870 into the 1930's when construction of the rail system opened up the interior of Mississippi and the lumber industry boomed.

This exhibit in the Heritage Center depicts a lumberjack using a pike pole to float logs down river during the water era.

of travel development in Mississippi through depictions of three travel eras. The story of agricultural commerce is intertwined as the story of Mississippi's development unfolds to visitors.

Your tour through the Gallery begins with the "water era," a time when goods like cotton were shipped by boat. Travel routes for people were limited to the way the rivers went. Beyond that, people were horseback. Movement of supplies and commodities took a little while longer than our modern day Amazon.com to deliver.

As the story progresses, visitors move into the "rail era," which covers the period of time between 1870 and the 1930's when construction of the rail system opened up the interior of Mississippi and the lumber industry boomed. The Yazoo-Mississippi River Delta and the Piney Woods regions were opened for cultivation and travel.

Development of our road system and the introduction of automobiles and tractors changed our road maps for certain. The "road era" section of the Gallery displays machines developed during the invention of mechanized equipment. Farming became faster and more efficient, and people could travel easier than before. Easier, that is, when the dirt roads weren't muddy anyway.

Things have certainly changed for the farmer and traveler alike in these past hundred years. The exhibits at the Ag Museum bring this story to life through objects and machines used by the very people who traveled before us. The GPS on the dash board in front of me reminds now of how much easier we have it than our ancestors.

Just for some perspective, here are a few notable occurrences from January 1916.

- January 1 – The British Royal Army Medical Corps carries out the first successful blood transfusion using blood that had been stored and cooled.

- January 9 – WWI: Gallipoli Campaign: Last British troops evacuated from Gallipoli, as the Ottoman Empire prevails over a joint British and French operation to capture Istanbul.

- January 13 – WWI: Battle of Wadi: Ottoman Empire forces defeat the Allied British during the Mesopotamian campaign in modern-day Iraq.

- January 24 –
  - o In Browning, Montana, the temperature drops from +6.7 °C to -48.8 °C (44 °F to -56 °F) in one day, the greatest change ever on record for a 24-hour period.

- o Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad: The Supreme Court of the United States upholds the national income tax.

- January 29 – WWI: Paris is bombed by German zeppelins for the first time.

The Ag Museum is located at 1150 Lakeland Drive in Jackson and is open Monday through Saturday from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. In addition to our gallery and exhibit spaces, the Ag Museum also has room for your event, whether it's a meeting, a wedding or other special event. # Eggs Bolster State's Total Poultry Values in 2015

By Linda Breazeale
MSU Extension Service

Spared from avian influenza outbreaks in 2015, Mississippi's poultry industry benefitted significantly from higher egg prices but still felt the pinch from export declines.

Preliminary estimates indicate a 3.4 percent increase in the state's poultry value. The largest growth is an almost 40 percent increase for eggs. Chickens (replacement egg layers) may be up 5 percent, and broilers were near even with a 0.4 percent increase, according to recent estimates from the Mississippi State University Extension Service.

Extension agricultural economist Brian Williams said poultry remains the state's largest agricultural commodity for the 21st year. Total poultry value is $3.2 billion, which included $2.9 billion for broilers, $328 million for eggs and $7 million for chickens used as laying hens. Poultry ranked ahead of the estimated $1.2 billion forest industry and $930 million soybean commodity.

"The highly pathogenic avian influenza outbreak primarily hurt turkey and egg production, and most of the outbreaks were in Minnesota and Iowa," Williams said. "Most of Mississippi's industry is broiler production, but we are also home to Cal-Maine, the nation's largest egg production company."

None of the Cal-Maine facilities across the country experienced an outbreak in 2015. The egg shortage caused by the outbreak bolstered prices for companies that were able to maintain production.

"Last Thanksgiving [2014], a dozen eggs were $1.85 to $2, but this year [2015], they were $3 or more," Williams said. "Thanks to avian influenza, there has been a shortage of laying hens and eggs. About 10 percent of the nation's laying hens were lost. None of them were in Mississippi."

In fact, Mississippi did not have any positive tests for the highly pathogenic avian influenza, and none of the out-of-state outbreaks were in broiler houses.

Tom Tabler, poultry specialist with the MSU Extension Service, said the avian influenza scare reduced some of the nation's export markets.

"While no broilers were impacted by avian influenza, Mississippi did feel the impact on the overseas markets. The fear of avian influenza hurt broilers, especially dark meat and paw exports," he said. "Domestic demand has struggled to keep up with increasing supply due to shrinking export markets."

Tabler said if avian influenza remains in check, many of these markets should begin to open back up after the first of the year. Additionally, poultry has remained competitive with beef and pork prices.

"The industry will closely monitor production levels in the coming months. As the beef and pork folks work through issues that have plagued their industries recently, the possibility of an oversupply of meat in the marketplace may be a consideration, especially if export markets are slow to return," he said.

Tabler said an added benefit in 2015 was the price of grain.

"Grain prices remained favorable throughout the year, which helped keep production costs in line," he said. "Feed is roughly 70 percent of the cost to produce chicken. If grain prices stay favorable, feed costs stay in line with expectations."

The 2015 avian influenza outbreak made the state's poultry industry increase its already significant biosecurity efforts, but the potential for another outbreak in 2016, especially in Mississippi, makes it hard to predict the state of the industry in the coming months.

"No one knows what will or will not happen. We are being vigilant, using good common sense and following strict biosecurity procedures, and that's about all we can do at this point," Tabler said. "Some things, such as where wild geese and ducks fly, are out of our control."

Tabler said the poultry industry is always aware of biosecurity issues, but the highly pathogenic strain has taken growers' efforts to the next level.

"Instead of having shoes, hairnets or other protective clothing designated for one farm, we are recommending a different set for each poultry house on a farm," Tabler said. "The biggest concern has been that when the migratory birds return South from last summer's visits to infected nesting grounds, the chance for local outbreaks would increase, especially in the first months of 2016. We are not going to drop our guard."

Tabler said absolutely no infected birds enter the food supply.

"Once commercial birds are infected, they will be euthanized and buried on the farm or composted in-house. Any transportation of infected live or dead birds could spread the infection," he said. "Infected houses undergo a more extensive cleaning and disinfecting than for a typical cleanout."

New Home Starts Boost 2015 Forest Products Value

An uptick in new home construction lifted the 2015 year-end value of Mississippi's timber harvest.

James Henderson, associate forestry professor with the Mississippi State University Extension Service, said preliminary figures indicate that this year's harvest of forest products is valued at $1.16 billion, an increase of 13.4 percent over the harvest value in 2014.

"Continued improvement in the U.S. economy has benefited the housing market, which has been the biggest influence on the rise in value of forest products," Henderson said. "As of October, housing starts have more than doubled from the record low following the Great Recession of 2007-2009."

U.S. South, the largest lumber distributor to Southeastern and Mid-Atlantic states, has ramped up production by almost 70 percent since 2011 to meet the demand. As a result of rising demand, pine sawtimber prices increased each quarter of 2015, to their highest point since 2011, Henderson said.

By the third quarter of 2015, pine sawtimber, also called pine stumpage, was selling for an average of $25.82 per ton statewide. This price represents an increase of almost 20 percent since the third quarter of 2011, when pine sawtimber sold for $21.55 per ton.

With more markets in the southern half of the state, landowners south of Interstate 20 get more for their timber than landowners north of that dividing line, Henderson said.

"Pine sawtimber prices were nearly 12 percent higher in south Mississippi as compared with the northern part of the state," Henderson said.

The third-quarter price for pine sawtimber in north Mississippi was $24.38 per ton. In south Mississippi, the price was $27.26 per ton for the same quarter.

The price landowners actually receive varies from the average considerably, depending on timber quality, the number of acres harvested, distance to the lumber mill, the number of other timber sales in the area, and how badly the mill needs timber, Henderson said.

Since International Paper in Courtland, Alabama, closed in 2014, there is an even greater gap in pulpwood prices. For the third quarter of 2015, pulpwood sold for an average of $4.92 per ton in north Mississippi and $9 per ton in south Mississippi.

Steve Prestridge, vice president and timberlands manager for Barge Timberland Management in Macon, said the plant closure caused a ripple effect for growers in the northern part of the state.

"That had more influence on our pulpwood market than anything," he said. "Markets are our biggest concern right now. We just don't have enough pulpwood or chip-saw markets for north Mississippi growers."

However, Barge Forest Products Co., which is an associated company of Barge Timberland Management, owns a sawmill in Macon, which provides a good market for high-grade pine sawtimber.

timber, which is a large portion of the markets in south Mississippi," said Prestridge, who worked as a procurement forester in the Monticello area until seven years ago. "Our clients in this area sell older timber, which is a different product class. It's a very localized market and gives them a longer growth increment."

North Mississippi landowners may see more market opportunities when Winston Plywood opens in Louisville. Increased investment along the Grenada railway could also enhance the wood products market.

Forest products rank No. 2 among the state's commodities. Poultry remains No. 1 with an estimated $3.22 billion value for 2015. Final figures will be released in February 2016 when more complete data is available.
