Christmas Tree Production Holds, Demand Still Rising

By Nathan Gregory
MSU Extension Service

Larry Haley has no problem selling his Christmas trees each November.

In fact, he has to set a limit on how many he can spare and stop once he reaches that number to maintain a steady inventory. His target this year is about 300 choose-and-cut trees before Thanksgiving.

"A couple of years ago, I got in trouble because I sold too many in one season and almost depleted the next year's stock," he said. "Last year, we started holding fields back for a season so that doesn't happen again."

Like his colleagues across the state, Haley has experienced a solid production season despite the recent drought. Dry weather compromised some of what he planted in 2016 and kept the trees in this year's harvest from being as thick as normal.

"October to the first part of November is when our species fill in. It's kind of like a growth spurt at that time," said Stephen Dicke, a forestry professor with the Mississippi State University Extension Service. "The lack of rain has not affected height growth, which is usually about 8 feet and set in the first part of the year. Some customers prefer their trees to be more open anyway. The Christmas tree buyer will get a high-quality tree from the farm this year."

Current production is projected to be flat, which means producers will sell more than 30,000 trees for about $1.7 million. The average cost will remain $56 per tree, or $7-10 per foot.

Leyland cypress varieties -- including Ovensii, Notabilis and Murray X -- are grown most often in Mississippi.

Growers also plant varieties of Western cypress, including Carolina Sapphire, in large quantities.

Customer demand has led growers to supplement their inventories with trees from outside the state. Most of these are North Carolina Fraser firs, which are desirable because their rounded needles and sturdy branches hold Christmas ornaments well.

Both the locally grown and imported trees are safer than most artificial trees because they are practically incombustible, Dicke said.

"Hybrid varieties can tolerate room temperature well for a month as long as they are watered regularly," he said. "You would need a blowtorch to catch one of them on fire, and the flame would go right back out before it could possibly spread to another object."

Offering out-of-state trees is not the only tactic growers are using to attract more customers. Haley said the biggest change he's seen in the industry since he planted his first trees in 2007 is the addition of agritourism at many tree farms.

"Having a fun activity like a pumpkin patch or corn maze can make you just as much money as growing the trees," he said. "But Christmas trees will always be the basic thing to stick with because that's the main draw."

Advertising Guidelines

The Mississippi Market Bulletin is published on the 1st and 15th of each month by the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce. The Mississippi Market Bulletin is an important way for the Department to disseminate news and information about issues affecting Mississippi's agriculture industry and the Department's operations.

Through its classified advertising section, the Bulletin provides a forum for Mississippi residents to buy and sell agricultural related items while also giving statewide exposure to small farmers who might not normally have the economic resources for such widespread advertising. The Bulletin does not publish commercial or display ads and all items offered for sale must have been produced, raised, grown or operated on the seller's property. Businesses, corporations, dealerships, brokers or other commercial enterprises are not allowed to advertise in the Mississippi Market Bulletin.

Advertising rules and guidelines have been established for the Mississippi Market Bulletin in order to comply with regulations enforced by the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce and to maintain the objectives of the publication. The staff of the Mississippi Market Bulletin reserves the right to edit, revise or reject any advertisement.

The Mississippi Market Bulletin assumes no responsibility for any notice appearing in the Bulletin nor for any transaction resulting from published notices. Advertisers are cautioned that it is against the law to misrepresent any product offered for sale in public notices or advertisements carried in any publication that is delivered by the United States Postal Service.

- In order to advertise in the Mississippi Market Bulletin you must be a subscriber. To place an ad, you must include your name, mailing address and account number that the subscription is listed under on each ad that you submit (this information will not be printed). Each subscriber is allowed to advertise two ads in the Bulletin, listing one ad per category.
- All listings must be agriculture related (raised, grown, produced or operated on your farm). At the top of your ad, write the category that the ad should be listed under. We reserve the right to edit, revise or reject each ad. Please print or type your ad.
- There is a 30-word limit for classified advertisements, this includes: price (on the item you are selling), your city, county and telephone number or name and complete address must be included in the ad if you do not list a telephone number. Ads cannot be held over from one issue to another. You must submit them for each issue.
- Out-of-state residents are not eligible to advertise with the following exceptions: Out-of-state ads are allowed in the "Wanting To Buy" category. Out-of-state ads are allowed for individuals owning farm property within the state that is being offered for sale (consisting of 10 acres or more).

Consider Family Dietary Needs at Holiday Parties

By Robert Nathan Gregory
MSU Extension Service

The holiday season is a time to celebrate blessings and good health -- something many Americans do by eating more food than normal.

People who have or are at risk for diabetes must be more careful and health-conscious to maintain their health, and family chefs should keep their loved ones' needs in mind when thinking about what dishes will be on the dinner table.

"Considering how we prepare our meals for family gatherings is critical," said David Buys, Mississippi State University Extension Service health specialist. "Nearly 12 percent of Mississippians 18 and older have been told by their physician that they have diabetes, and approximately 25 percent of people who have diabetes don't know it. This is especially risky, as they may be developing serious complications that are irreversible."

Preparing holiday meals for family members with diabetes does not have to be a difficult task for the cooks, and people who have diabetes don't have to swear off all the food they like to manage their condition.

"There are many simple tricks that can be easily integrated into daily habits that can make a great impact on the health status of their loved ones who are recently diagnosed with diabetes or who have had it for years," said Extension dietetic intern Monika Goralczyk.

One strategy to consider at the grocery store is focusing more on better nutritional choices instead of worrying about which foods to avoid.

"Whole grains are great for stabilizing blood sugar and avoiding high and low spikes, but not all grains have to be whole," Goralczyk said. "Mix whole grains with refined grains such as in pasta or rice. This way, you will still be getting in a serving of whole grains as well as the taste you're used to."

Paying specific attention to the ingredient lists found on the back of food product labels can help the family holiday chef put together a dish that is both tasteful and suitable for everyone's diets.

"A great label for individuals to look for is the Whole Grain Council Label. This label is a gold square that lets the consumer know there is at least half a serving of whole grains in the product," Goralczyk said. "You can tell a product is a true whole grain when the first ingredient listed says 'whole' followed by 'grain flour,' 'wheat flour' or 'grain rice.'"

Diabetics can start small with what they remove from their diet to manage their blood sugar levels. Goralczyk also recommended not being afraid to try new products.

"Make one small change per day. Switching out one glass of juice or soda for water is a step in the right direction," she said. "Labels that say 'lite' or 'diet' cut sugar intake found in regular drinks by at least half."

Buy unflavored and unsweetened dairy products to avoid added sugar.

"Don't be afraid to try new things," Goralczyk said. "Buying a single serving of yogurt to test taste can help you and your family decide if a new product can be a better option than your current foods."

Diabetes does not mean a lifetime ban on snacks at holiday parties or in daily routines, but which ones are chosen and how much is eaten is critical.

"Popcorn is an example of a great snack idea," she said. "It is a whole grain and you can have a good portion size. Just make sure to limit popcorn that has a lot of added butter and salty toppings."

Effectively managing or preventing diabetes requires changes in habits, but gradual modifications increase the chance for success.

"Start with one or two of these ideas this holiday season, master them and add new strategies," Buys said. "If you take on too many changes at once, you'll likely become frustrated and throw them all out the window."
